THE COUNTY REPUBLICANS

CONGRATULATIONS UPON THE RECENT VICTORY.

MEETING OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE—DISTRICTS MEETING REORGANIZATION—THE NOVEMBER TRIUMPH CELEBRATED—DISCUSSING EX-PRESIDENTIAL PENSIONS—LETTER FROM MR. DOWD.

The Republican Central Committee held its first monthly meeting since the election, in Republican Hall, last night. The attendance of members was large, and the very best of feeling prevailed. The Executive Committee held a prolonged session, lasting until 6:30, so that there was abundant time and opportunity for members from the different districts to compare notes. The main issue being out of the way, such small differences as had been hidden during the Presidential contest were brought out to be aired. It was found that several districts needed attention, and the committee adopted resolutions intended to reach each particular case. The meeting was called to order soon after 8:30 by Mr. Abraham Lent. On motion of Mr. Ernest Hall, the roll-call was dispensed with. Col. Mason was ready with a budget of papers when the Executive Committee was requested to make its report. Rising when his name was called, he announced that he was requested to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That the delegates to the Central Committee of 1881 be apportioned upon the votes cast for Presidential Electors at the last election, one delegate being allowed for each 800 Republican votes or fraction thereof exceeding one-half and as follows:

District.	Delegates.	District.	Delegates.
I	6	XIV	7
II	4	XV	13
III	9	XVI	8
IV	8	XVII	15
V	5	XVIII	8
VI	8	XIX { 12th Ward	3
VII	20	{ 22d Ward	6
VIII	14	XXI	15
IX	8	XXII	12
X	14	XXIII	16
XI	15	XXIV { 23d Ward	7
XII	10	{ 24th Ward	9
XIII	16

The resolution was adopted without discussion or opposition. "I am further instructed to report the following," said Col. Mason, Secretary Solon B. Smith read:

Resolved, That the State Committee be petitioned to empower the Central Committee to order a recruitment and reorganization of the Republican Party in the Fourth and Fifteenth Assembly Districts of this City.

The resolution was cordially applauded, and was immediately adopted.

Col. Mason then submitted a complaint signed by Samuel Hamburger and several other members of the Twenty-second District Association, charging that through gross mismanagement the association was in a state of chaos, that many Democrats were on the rolls, that primary meetings had been held in inaccessible places, that the campaign clubs had sent up the organization during the election, and that the district needed reorganization. The complaint took the same course as the resolution in regard to the Fourth and Fifteenth Districts.

Chairman Lent then called upon the Committee on Resolutions to make their report. Commissioner French, Chairman of the committee, stepped upon the platform and read the following:

Resolved, That we congratulate the people of the City, State, and Nation upon the triumphant success of Garfield and Arthur by an Electoral majority so great as to obviate all danger of a disputed count.

Resolved, That the thanks of Republicans everywhere are due both to the National and State Committees, not only for their zeal and energy, but for their honorable methods in conducting the late campaign; methods so utterly at variance with the secret dens, aliases, sealed envelopes, and falsifications by which their political antagonists sought in vain to achieve success.

Resolved, That the thanks of this committee are hereby extended to the merchants, bankers, brokers, and other business men of this City for their active, earnest, and enthusiastic support of the candidates of the Republican Party.

Resolved, That this committee hereby returns its cordial thanks to the numerous campaign clubs for their active and intelligent work, and especially to the Sixth club organized under the auspices of this committee, and to Gen. Lloyd Aspinwall, its President, for the perfect organization and successful management of the grandest civic procession that this country has ever seen.

Resolved, That in the election of Gen. James A. Garfield to the Presidency the Nation has paid a deserved tribute to his moral worth, to his brilliant intellectual endowments, and to his experience and ability as a statesman.

Resolved, That the party is especially indebted to the Hon. Chester A. Arthur for his management of the campaign in this State—a management which, while able and effective, was characterized by a modesty, dignity, and straightforwardness which entitle it to the respect and esteem of all who believe that a political campaign should be conducted on a proper regard for the promotion and amenities of life.

Resolved, That the wisdom of the Chicago Convention in its choice of Gen. Arthur as its candidate for Vice-President has been signally vindicated by the vote through which the citizens of the State and City of New-York have expressed the regard in which he is held in his own home.

Resolved, That, regretting as we do the defeat of many of our candidates for Municipal office, we see in the results of the election, and in the omen of success in the near future, that our opponents, in the City which they have always regarded as their stronghold, have won in the local struggle by so narrow and petty a majority.

Resolved, That the result of the late election assures:

1. The maintenance of the national credit.
2. The continued prosperity of American industries.
3. A guarantee to every citizen in every State that he shall be free to vote and that his vote shall be counted.
4. A lasting evidence that the suffrages of the American people cannot be secured by slander, fraud, or forgery, and an emphatic rebuke to all who sought to degrade our national election from a fair expression of the popular will to a contest of fraudulent device and false pretenses.
5. A proof that the Republican Party can, by a firm maintenance of its principles and its policy, give to the City of New-York the good government which has been denied it by the irresponsible and arbitrary dictatorship which controls the local Democratic organization.

The resolutions were admirably read by the Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, Commissioner Stephen B. French. The references to Garfield and Arthur were vociferously applauded. The resolutions were adopted, with three cheers for Gen. Chester A. Arthur.

Dr. Pierre C. Van Wyck offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this committee steps should be taken by our Representatives in Congress to so amend the Constitution of the United States as to provide that the President and Vice-President, on their retirement from office, should be admitted to life membership of the Senate.

Mr. Isaac Dayton was promptly upon his feet. He said: "This resolution, Mr. Chairman, involves a very serious question, and one that requires the careful consideration of the committee before it shall be adopted. I believe it should go to the Committee on Resolutions. I am not opposed to it, but I would object to hasty consideration of it, and prefer that the committee have time to look it over before we are asked to vote upon it."

Mr. William A. Darling also thought it was of sufficient importance, a matter of such weight and character as to bear postponement until it could be considered by the Committee on Resolutions, which was chosen to review propositions committing the party to distinctive ideas. The Central Committee should have the counsel of that committee. He was clearly of the opinion that something ought to be done for Presidents and Vice-Presidents, but whether it should take a pecuniary shape or the one proposed was a question. Mr. John D. Lawson also counseled consideration.

Dr. Van Wyck said he did not object to reference. The subject had been brought up during the last few days in the public prints, and a large number of men were convinced that the country should not lose the knowledge and experience of its retiring officers.

Mr. D. W. C. Ward thought the Republican Representatives in Washington ought to be urged to provide a pension, so that there should be no degradation possible to those officers after their retirement. The resolution was referred, and the convention was adjourned.

During the meeting of the committee a complaint from Dr. D. F. Fuller, of the Fifteenth Assembly District, was handed to Secretary Solon B. Smith, but was not read. He says that on the day previous to the Presidential election he called at the house of William M. Montgomery, West Thirty-fifth-street, for tickets to distribute, and received over 300, of which he left in Decker Brothers' piano factory 300, and when the men came to use them fully two-thirds of them had tickets with the names of candidates as follows: Charles A. Rapallo, Horace Russell, Frederick Smyth, Charles J. Nehrbas, for the Judiciary. Dr. Fuller says he has several of these tickets in his possession, received from the girls who folded them; that he has always been a Republican since the formation of that party, and that he resides in the Fifteenth District and is ready to appear before the committee.

Just before adjournment the following letter was sent to the committee to be read to the members:

To the Republican Central Committee of the City of New-York:

GENTLEMEN: I wish to express through you to the Republican Party in the City of New-York, and to all the good citizens, irrespective of party, who united with us in the recent Municipal election, my thanks for the hearty and efficient support received by me and by the whole Republican County ticket.

I especially thank the members of your body and the many citizens both in and out of the Republican Party who labored so faithfully and earnestly for our success.

I congratulate you upon the result of the Municipal election. Although our opponents have been elected by a large majority, we have achieved a moral victory of far greater value than the possession of any office.

The chief obstacle to our success was the belief of many that success was impossible. We have proved that it was possible. We have shown that the City of New-York cannot be confidently sold and certainly delivered by one or any number of Democratic organizations. We have ascertained that the desire for good government is stronger among the good citizens of New-York than any sentiment derived from their political affiliations upon national issues.

We have demonstrated that if the Democratic organizations of the City refuse to give good government, the people of the City will come to the Republican Party for it. I believe that they will have to come and that they will get it.

I trust that the results which we have now attained are but a prelude to substantial and conclusive victories in the near future.

I remain, gentlemen, with great respect, your obedient servant, WILLIAM DOWD.

THE INSANE ASYLUM HORROR.

HUNDREDS OF HALF-CLOTHED LUNATICS LET LOOSE IN THE STREETS—THE NUMBER OF LIVES LOST IN DOUBT.

ST. PAUL, NOV. 16.—The confusion that prevails at the scene of the burned insane asylum at St. Peter, makes it impossible to obtain definite information of the number of victims or the names even of any of the saved. The fire broke out in the gasoline works connected with the asylum, and resulted in the destruction of the north wing. The weather was cold, with a sharp wind, and the ground was covered with snow. There were about 600 patients in the building, and when the alarm was given prompt efforts were made to withdraw them from the threatened peril. The scene of confusion which ensued can be better imagined than described. The patients in the annex wing were males. Many of them refused to leave the building at all. They ran up and down the halls, screaming and crying. Of course, those who could not be forced or coaxed out of the building became the unhappy victims of the flames, and suffered a horrible death in the flames. Others were saved, some by ladders, and some by leaping from the windows. Some were nearly nude, some shoeless and hatless, and all were exposed to the severe cold of the night.

The scenes about the city during the progress of the fire were horrible. The poor dazed inmates of the asylum who had escaped from the flames were at large, half clothed, and seem to be seen in all directions flying in wild fright from those who attempted to save them. The air was bitter cold, and the poor unfortunates, with half-naked bodies and bleeding feet, were running about, hiding in alleys and dark corners. Gov. Pillsbury and the persons who accompanied him to St. Peter returned here to-night. The surviving patients will be provided for at State and county institutions and in other places, and in the unburned half of the building. The officers of the institution estimate the number killed at from six to ten, but others believe it to be at least 20. Only one body has been recovered. It was recognized as that of Mr. Abrams, of Minneapolis, formerly a member of the Legislature. The loss is from $100,000 to $200,000, with no insurance.

Another dispatch says: "While the flames were slowly gaining volume, the Matron of the female department made all haste to get the inmates out, and many of them ran shrieking into the snow-drifts in their night-clothes, even burying themselves in the snow, and had to be dragged out into barns and sheds, while those near by wrapped blankets and shawls around them. Hence intense suffering could not be avoided, as they had to be taken about 15 or 20 rods through the snow to the nearest shelter, which was on a hill immediately in the rear of the south wing. Several ladies were taken out of some of the rooms and halls, and several persons were got out into the halls, when they seemed determined to return to the flames. One room, occupied by two men, was broken into, and, while one of the occupants had to be dragged out, the other was determined to remain in his warm bed, and, when dragged out, he insisted on waiting to be dressed. An old man brought here from Minneapolis, by the name of Adams, was taken out dead. The principal cause of delay in getting a stream of water on the fire from the hospital hose arose from the fact that it had not been in use for so long a time that it required to be wet from end to end on the outside with hot water. In the meantime the flames spread very rapidly from the basement, filling the halls with smoke and making it impossible to do anything in the way of saving the inmates of the north wing, except by putting up ladders and prying off fire-screens from doors, taking the occupants out and actually carrying them down without clothing in many cases. At some of the windows there were three or four begging to be saved from death, while the flames were burning from the adjoining windows at them. One poor fellow was dragged through a half-open screen and badly mangled. Assistance has been telegraphed for to Rochester, Minn., and St. Paul for food, clothing, and shelter for the men. Two-thirds of the hospital is saved. The walls of the burned part are standing entire."

Dr. Bartlett, Superintendent of the Asylum, says that there are not more than 12 lives lost, and probably as many more hurt and suffering from the bitter cold of last night. Indeed, more people are believed to be injured and dying from exposure to the weather than from burns. Other people say that as many as 90 insane people either perished in the flames or died on the cold hills during the night. So many patients have disappeared that it cannot be told who are dead and who ran away. The suffering has been terrible. Hundreds of the patients are as helpless as children, and are naturally shocked and dazed, so as to render them almost insensible. Gov. Pillsbury has a band of workers who are doing everything possible for the comfort of the distressed. The Governor says he can make arrangements for the accommodation of most of the insane at St. Peter in the hospital houses. The ruins are being overhauled as fast as possible in the search for the dead. The officers of the institution are making every effort to discover the whereabouts of missing patients and to take care of those still here. Arrangements will be perfected before the night closes by which all will be comfortably cared for. The telegraph office here is overcrowded with messages from all parts of the State, and the greatest difficulty is met in receiving and sending any news. It is impossible to get any names to-night.

ACKNOWLEDGING HIS DEFEAT.

RED BANK, N. J., Nov. 16.—Charles Allen, the Democratic candidate for the Legislature from the Third District, who received his certificate of election from the Board of County Canvassers on a majority of 1 vote, has accepted the decision of Judge Scudder, a Democratic Justice of the Supreme Court, giving the election to G. H. Lufburrow, the Republican candidate, by a majority of 7 votes.

CLOSING THE STATE CANALS.

ALBANY, Nov. 16.—State Superintendent Belcher to-day issued orders closing the Black River Canal on Nov. 20 inst., and all other canals on Nov. 25.

A GIGANTIC COMBINATION

JAY GOULD'S PLAN FOR CONSOLIDATING GREAT RAILROADS.

EFFORTS TO BRING THE TRUNK LINES WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI UNDER ONE MANAGEMENT—MEXICO TO BE PENETRATED AND THE PACIFIC COAST REACHED—GEN. GRANT TO BE OFFERED THE PRESIDENCY OF THE GREAT COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Associate Justice Miller, of the United States Supreme Court, sitting in Chambers, heard arguments of counsel last week on behalf of the Directors of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad for the discharge of the Receivers appointed several years ago by the United States Circuit Court, and for the restoration of the road to the stockholders. The motion for the discharge of the Receivers was made in the Circuit Court of the Kansas District, and was argued on behalf of the company by Judge Dillon, of Iowa, no opposition, it is understood, being made on the part of the creditors. The motion was accompanied by a tender on the part of the stockholders of full payment of defaulted interest on the company's bonds, amounting in the aggregate to about $1,000,000. This sum is actually deposited to meet the overdue payments, and assurances were given that the improved condition of the road was such that future payments of interest would be promptly met. Justice Miller to-day rendered his decision, granting the motion of the petitioners and restoring the road to its stockholders upon payment of the sum due the bondholders.

This decision is important in its bearings not only upon the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road proper, but even more important in connection with a grand scheme of railroad consolidation and extension already partly arranged by the persons controlling the line of railroad named. The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Road extends from Kansas City and St. Louis through the Indian Territory to Dennison, Texas, at which point it has connections to Austin, San Antonio, and Galveston, on the Gulf of Mexico. It is proposed, and the necessary arrangements have been partly made, to consolidate with the Missouri, Kansas and Texas, the Missouri Pacific, the Texas Pacific, and their various branches and feeders, which would carry the consolidated line to the Gulf of Mexico and the Rio Grande on the south and the Pacific Ocean on the west, and to continue the line to the City of Mexico. This is Mr. Jay Gould's scheme and its successful accomplishment would include in the combination the Wabash system, connecting the Kansas line at Kansas City and St. Louis with the lakes and with the Northwestern States and Territories by means of the Union Pacific combination. It is understood that the main object of the pending efforts to consolidate the Central Pacific with the Union Pacific is to bring the Central Pacific into this grand combination, and thus practically control the railways of the entire continent west of the Mississippi, and south to the very heart of Mexico.

Another part of the general plan is to make Gen. Grant President of the consolidated company, first, because of his great ability to direct such a gigantic enterprise, and, secondly, because it is believed that Gen. Grant would be able to secure from the Government of Mexico every concession necessary to extend the road into the States of that country. Jay Gould and the persons managing this scheme have been working at it for some time. Mr. Gould's recent visit to the South-west having reference to the matter, and Col. Thomas A. Scott being now in that section to further the enterprise. The charter acts and various laws of Congress relating to the Pacific Railroads have been carefully examined and the Railroad Bureau of the Interior Department has been consulted, and it has been ascertained that there is nothing in the laws to prevent the contemplated consolidation, nor would the interests of the Government as a creditor of the several railroads included in the scheme be in any way prejudiced thereby. The affirmative decision of the court to-day on the motion to discharge the Receivers of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Road was necessary to the progress of the consolidation movement.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Company is called for to-morrow at Parsons, Kan. At this meeting a proposition will be presented to the stockholders to issue $25,000,000 of stock in addition to the existing capital stock of the company, and another proposition will be submitted for the issue of general consolidation mortgage bonds upon the franchises and property of the company to secure the contemplated issue of $45,000,000 of bonded debt now outstanding, and to enable the company to extend its lines by construction or acquisition to the City of Mexico.

Friends of Gen. Grant, cognizant of the plans above outlined, say the General has been fully consulted in reference to the scheme, and that it is favorably regarded by him. The present visit of Señor Romero, of Mexico, to the United States, and the recent meeting at New-York, at which Gen. Grant made an interesting speech on the immense natural resources of Mexico, the opportunities presented by that country for the profitable investment of capital in railroad and mining enterprises, and the great commercial advantages to be derived by the United States by establishing railroad communication with the States of Mexico, are believed to have intimate connection with this contemplated enterprise.

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—The Times to-morrow will state as coming from good authority that the scheme for the consolidation of the Union Pacific, Central Pacific, and Southern Pacific Railroads under one management is being pushed forward, and that the plan for the consolidation of the first-named two roads is nearly consummated.

HOW CONNECTICUT VOTED.

PARTICULARS OF THE VOTE FOR PRESIDENT, GOVERNOR, AND OTHER OFFICERS.

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 16.—The State Board of Canvassers will meet in this City to-morrow to canvass the votes cast at the recent election. The total vote for President is 122,764, and for Governor 122,763, a difference of only 1 vote, which is a close tally considering the number of candidates, but there was comparatively little scratching. Garfield has 67,076; Hancock, 64,417; Weaver, 599; Dow, 405; Garfield's plurality is 2,659; majority, 1,382. Bigelow, (Rep.,) for Governor, has 67,070; English, (Dem.,) 64,266; Baldwin, (Grbk.,) 599; Rogers, (Prob.,) 428; scattering, 15. Bigelow's plurality is 2,777; majority, 1,377. The majorities for Republican candidates below Governor are as follows: Bulkeley, Lieutenant-Governor, 1,661; Searls, Secretary of State, 1,657; Nichols, Treasurer, 1,859; Batchelder, Controller, 1,701. The average Republican vote on all candidates is 67,105, and the average Democratic vote 64,325; average Republican plurality, 2,820. The average vote for all opposition candidates is 65,599, making the average Republican majority on all candidates 1,506.

CONTESTS IN LOUISIANA.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 16.—United States Marshal Wharton, in an interview with a reporter of the Times to-day, stated that the Republicans proposed to contest the seats of the Democrats returned as elected from the Fourth and Fifth Congressional Districts, and may also decide to contest the First and Second Districts. He says the late election was a farce.

OFFICIAL VOTE OF NEBRASKA.

OMAHA, Nov. 16.—Complete official returns in the office of the Secretary of State show that the majorities range from 34,955 for Valentine, member of Congress, to 32,616 for Cornu, Lieutenant-Governor. The average majority on the entire State ticket over the Democratic and Greenback candidates is 33,324. The full vote of the State is about 67,500. The Greenback vote averaged about 3,800. The Saunders-Roeswater faction of the Republican Party sent out thousands of tickets with Valentine's and Cairns's names erased or omitted entirely, and they predicted they would reduce the majorities of these two candidates at least 10,000 each, but the result was as above stated.

THE MOREY LETTER.

DEMOCRATS ASHAMED OF THEIR WORK—PROGRESS OF THE PROSECUTION.

The Morey letter has not ceased to be an interesting subject of conversation among newspaper readers, and the answer of Judge Davis to Mr. A. S. Hewitt's complaint was yesterday commented upon as being at once a dignified and complete reply. The general desire of everybody whose name has been connected with this shameful forgery to get rid of the odium of having consented to or aided in its publication does not escape attention. Mr. Hewitt's efforts to be rid of blame were only equaled by his readiness to be godfather to the letter on Oct. 20. William M. Price, the Chairman of the Allegany (Md.) County Committee, who has been accused of writing the Lindsay affidavit before he had found a Lindsay to swear to it, declares that he knows nothing about it. In the meantime the case of Philp is still before the Grand Jury. Among the witnesses who are here to testify is George E. C. Morey, Samuel S. Morey's half-brother, who arrived here last night from Lynn. It is expected that Mr. Ames, the expert in handwriting, will testify to-day. Mr. George Bliss, Mr. Bell, and Mr. Davenport are still at work on the case, but they are extremely reticent about it. They regard the suggestion that Henry Hercules Hadley had any part in the production of the witness Lindsay as originating from Hadley himself, and attach no sort of importance to his statement. Up to last evening Kenward Philp had not secured a second bondsman, Deputy Sheriff Fay not having come forward, and by permission of Judge Davis Philp was allowed until to-day, at noon, to procure a surety in addition to Gen. Spinola.

The witnesses who came from Cumberland have been busily engaged in collecting further evidence that may prove to be of value. Word has been received that Col. H. J. Johnson—who came on during the examination, and proved to be a valuable witness for the prosecution—has collected some information at Washington as to how the Lindsay affidavit was obtained for the Democratic National Committee. He has the register of the Queen City Hotel to show that Henry L. Walton, whoever he is, stopped in Cumberland on Nov. 4 and 5. Col. Johnson and Thomas McCardle have said that they can prove that Price sent the Democratic National Committee the substance of the Lindsay affidavit before it had been sworn to by anybody, while he was searching for some one to personate Lindsay. It was only, it appears, when the Morey letter began to create an excitement, and was indignantly denounced as spurious, that Price undertook to decline all responsibility for the affidavit, and the man Walton, who is believed to have been sent on by a member of the Democratic National Committee, made his appearance in Cumberland in search of somebody who would consent to be passed off as Lindsay.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 16.—United States Chief Supervisor of Elections John I. Davenport is taking a hand in the investigation of the Lindsay mystery at Cumberland. He has been in Washington in consultation with those who are working up the case in Cumberland. It is now proposed to have the matter brought before the United States Circuit Court in New-York, which, it is believed, can take cognizance of the matter, inasmuch as the Lindsay affidavit was prepared with a view to influence the election there on trial. There is also an impression that the original affidavit was prepared in New-York and sent to Cumberland to be falsely sworn to by the fictitious Robert Lindsay. To get at the truth in the matter, a series of interrogatories has been prepared by Mr. Davenport, which will be taken to Cumberland, and put to Michael Cronly and Frank Brady, who will be required to answer them under oath. If, as is now intimated, a charge of subornation of perjury is laid against Democratic Elector Price, new interest will be given to the matter, as the question will be raised as to his ability to vote in the Electoral College. It is now clear that O'Brien, who personated Robert Lindsay in New-York, and the person who swore to the Cumberland affidavit, are two different persons.

THE MISSOURI CONGRESSMEN.

THREE GREENBACKERS WHO WILL VOTE WITH THE REPUBLICANS—TWO CLOSE DISTRICTS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Congressman Phillips, of Missouri, who is now here, thus explained to a representative of the Post the political attitude of the three Greenbackers known to be elected from that State to the Forty-seventh Congress: "I have this to say of the three Greenbackers elected in Missouri, that their antecedents are all Republican. Their Greenbackism I regard simply as a disguise to capture the Democratic Greenback votes. Their sympathies are with the Republican Party, its plans and purposes, and in all test questions, where it is necessary to maintain its ascendency they will act with it. In the organization of the House, if there are Republicans enough to elect a Speaker without their votes, they will vote for a Greenbacker, to maintain their relations to the latter party, but if their votes are needed to organize the House in the interests of the Republican Party they will be had. Any calculation founded on any other basis than this will be found to be incorrect. The active and undivided support which these men received from the Republican Party points unmistakably to the conclusion that the latter had pledges from these men beforehand." Mr. Phillips says there is a tie in the Ninth District between Ford, Greenbacker, and Craig, Democrat, and that the Governor will order a new election. In the Sixth District the vote between Hazeltine, Republican-Greenbacker, and Waddill, Democrat, is close, but the indications favor Hazeltine's election. The official count will be necessary to decide who is elected in this district.

SENATOR BROWN RE-ELECTED.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 16.—There was a great crowd at the Capitol to-day to attend the election of a United States Senator. The only two candidates were Joseph E. Brown, whom Gov. Colquitt appointed in Gen. Gordon's stead, and Gen. A. R. Lawton, of Savannah, one of the leading lawyers in the State. Lawton was warmly supported by the Bourbon element in the State, while Brown commanded the Republican and liberal Democratic vote. The canvass has been very warm. The pressure here was very strong for Brown, and last night he addressed 3,000 people at a very enthusiastic meeting. Brown's election was conceded to be inevitable, but such a Waterloo as occurred was not expected. In the Senate, Brown had 28 and Lawton 16. In the House, Brown had 118 and Lawton 43. Brown's election was heartily cheered. It is considered a triumph for the liberal element in the State.

A TOWN'S VOTE THROWN OUT.

MONTPELIER, Vt., Nov. 16.—In the House, the committee to canvass the votes for the county and probate officers and Justices of the Peace has decided to throw out the entire vote of the town of Colchester for such officers, for the following reasons: A high barricade was placed in front of the ballot-box, so that voters could not see the box; the right of challenge was defeated, and the boxes were taken away and the votes not counted the next day, and no declaration was made at the meeting. The town of Colchester is, therefore, without any Justices.

PENNSYLVANIA'S VOTE ANNOUNCED.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 16.—Gov. Hoyt issued a proclamation to-day announcing the election of Republican Electors in this State, and of Henry Graves as Supreme Court Judge, John A. Lemon as Auditor-General, and 19 Republican and 8 Democratic candidates for Congress.

AFFAIRS IN FOREIGN LANDS

THE REVOLT AGAINST THE IRISH LAND LAWS.

THE PROSECUTION OF THE AGITATORS—PARLIAMENT NOT YET CALLED TO MEET—MR. JOHN BRIGHT DISCUSSES REMEDIAL MEASURES.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—Attached to the bill of particulars furnished by the prosecution to the traversers is a schedule of the meetings held by the league, concluding with that held at Limerick on the 3d inst., but it is expressly stated that the Government is not hereby precluded from relying on subsequent proceedings of the Land League for conviction.

The Pall Mall Gazette this evening, in a leading editorial article, says: "Appearances point to the Cabinet postponing its decision as to the necessity of a December session of Parliament, until to-morrow's Cabinet council."

The London correspondent of a Manchester paper says the date for the commencement of the session of Parliament is still uncertain. It is believed that the Government's Irish Land bill will enable the local courts to award compensation even to tenants evicted for non-payment of rent; give the courts more power for interference in cases of excessive rent; improve the Bright clauses in the Land act, and simplify the transfer of land.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Mr. Parnell will go to Paris immediately.

Mr. John Bright, speaking at Birmingham yesterday, strongly condemned the land laws of Ireland, which virtually gave the proprietors a monopoly of the land. Mr. Bright attributed the state of affairs in Ireland to the rejection by the House of Lords of the Compensation for Disturbance bill. With regard to the future, he said force would effect nothing. The Government would not approve chimerical projects for the transfer of land to the tenants. Mr. Bright said he believed the remedy would be a well-considered plan giving tenants security in the possession of farms and protection against constant increase of rent. This plan would include provisions by which landlords willing to sell would be able to deal with tenants willing to buy.

A dispatch from Brussels says there is good reason to believe that 8,000 rifles were shipped recently in some steamers at several Italian ports for Ireland, and that the rifles were purchased in Switzerland by some Irishmen who had come from the United States.

A dispatch from Ballinrobe says the commander of the troops there has been ordered to be ready to proceed at a moment's notice, by forced marches, in the direction of Galway, probably on account of an alleged importation of arms into the disturbed districts from America by way of the great English ports.

A member of the Land League says the expedition of the Lough Mask tenants to Lord Erne's residence has been abandoned, as the executive of the Land League refused to countenance the proceeding, against which it intends to quit the district. The address of the tenants has been withdrawn.

A dispatch from Dublin says: "A telegram has been received from Ballinrobe that 400 additional troops will be sent there immediately."

The Land League refused to sanction the expedition to Lord Erne's house because of the excited state of the country.

The News, in a leading article, says: "We may assume that the manner of dealing with the condition of Ireland will occupy the attention of the Cabinet council to-day, and probably by the end of the week the Government will have come to a decisive understanding."

The Standard, in its leading editorial, says it is understood that to-day's Cabinet council will take an important decision in regard to Ireland. The article hints at a split in the Cabinet. The Times in its leader also speaks of serious differences of opinion in the Cabinet in regard to Ireland.

At the weekly meeting of the Land League, at Dublin to-day, Mr. Egan stated that the traversers intended to proceed against the Express and Mail, newspapers, for attempting to prejudice the jury and prevent the traversers from receiving a fair trial.

An additional reward of £500 has been offered for the discovery of the murderer of Lord Mountmorris.

CURRENT FOREIGN TOPICS.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 16.—Two leading Nihilist organizers were hanged at the fortress at 8 o'clock this morning.

AGRAM, Nov. 16.—Two violent shocks of earthquake occurred here at midnight, causing a panic, and the flight of the inhabitants is thus renewed.

GENEVA, Nov. 16.—The election of members of the new Great Council has resulted in a triumph for the anti-Catholics and extreme Radicals.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—A Vienna correspondent says: "The meeting of the Austro-German Constitutionalists here on Sunday last was an imposing demonstration. Nothing can shake the fact that the Liberal German Party in the Reichsrath has quite nine-tenths of the well-to-do, educated Germans of Austria behind it in any struggle against Federalist attempts."

A dispatch from Cape Town, dated the 12th inst., says: "The Poudo Chief, Umhlonhlo, has been defeated by the Colonials, with the loss of 600 head of cattle. The Premier of the Cape Colony telegraphs as follows: "Brownlee reports that he has sufficient force to suppress the rebellion in Griqualand, East. The situation in Basutoland is unchanged, and there is no further extension of rebellion in any direction."

CAPE TOWN, Nov. 16.—Fifteen hundred men have gone patrolling through Basuto-land.

PARIS, Nov. 16.—In the Senate to-day debate on M. Buffet's interpellation was resumed. M. Chesnelong, Legitimist, asked whether occult direction did not exist behind the Ministry. He intimated that the Cabinet, from dread of M. Gambetta, had retracted what it had previously approved. This remark caused an uproar in the House. M. Jules Simon attacked the Government and praised the policy of M. de Freycinet. M. Leon Say then read an order of the day proposed by M. Simon, that the Senate, being unable to countenance the policy of arbitrariness which disturbs the public peace, passes to the order of the day. M. Duverney moved that the Senate, regretting that the policy of M. De Freycinet had not been followed, and hoping that it would be pursued in the future, passes to the order of the day. Premier Ferry declined to accept either of these orders of the day, and demanded the adoption of the order of the day, pure and simple, and his motion to that effect was carried, 143 to 137.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—A dispatch from Bucharest reports that the United States Government has officially invited the Roumanian Government to send a delegate to the International Sanitary Conference, which opens in Washington on the 1st of February, 1881.

AN ARRESTED MARSHAL.

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 16.—George Wingate, a United States Deputy Marshal, was arrested Nov. 13 on a charge of disorderly conduct and inciting to riot at the polls on election day. He was arraigned before Mayor Allmand, and the hearing was postponed until to-morrow, Wingate giving bail. To-day United States District Attorney Patterson issued a writ of habeas corpus, compelling the Mayor and Chief of Police to deliver Wingate before the United States court to-morrow. No action has yet been taken by the Mayor.

CALIFORNIA'S ELECTORS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 16.—Full official returns of this State show that Henry Edgerton (Rep.) receives 507 more votes for Elector than does Judge Terry, the lowest on the Democratic ticket, and is elected. The other Democratic Electors have majorities ranging from 87 to 148.

GARFIELD TO VISIT WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—A private dispatch received here to-night from Gen. Garfield, says he will leave Mentor for Washington on Monday next. The purpose of Gen. Garfield's visit to Washington is to arrange some personal business affairs. He will return to his home in Ohio prior to the assembling of Congress, and will not again visit Washington until the latter part of February.

A POLITICAL LIBEL SUIT.

CONGRESSMAN RYON AND THE FRANKED ENVELOPES—A SUIT THAT WILL PROBABLY NEVER BE TRIED.

POTTSVILLE, Nov. 16.—THE NEW-YORK TIMES may properly assume the credit of placing a political libel suit in a very disabled condition. The suit in question was brought last week by John W. Ryon, defeated candidate for reelection on the Democratic ticket in the Thirteenth Congressional district, against the Schuylkill Republican, a weekly paper published at Minersville, an adjoining town. On the 24 of October last this paper printed an editorial in which Mr. Ryon was charged with abusing the franking privilege. The same charge was made in the Miners' Journal in its issue of Sept. 25, presumably on information obtained from the columns of THE TIMES. The mistake made by the Republican was in its choice of words. It could have conveyed the same impression, and in a much more effective manner, without stating in so many words that Mr. Ryon was a thief. No official notice was taken of the article at that time by the person most interested, but, as Mr. Ryon stated in court yesterday, he laid the paper away for future reference, probably feeling confident at the time that he would be re-elected. His is a Democratic district. Hancock obtained in it a majority over Garfield of 2,171 votes, and if Mr. Ryon had given satisfaction to his constituents during his first and last term in Congress he could not well have been beaten. His competitor is by no means personally popular, yet he was elected by a majority of 1,081 votes. Ryon considers him beneath his notice in point of ability, and on this score there can be no comparison between the men. This fact, more than anything else, has proved intensely galling to Mr. Ryon, and in a fit of spleen, and with a blind desire to wreak his vengeance on somebody, he brought suit against the editor of the Republican. The latter was arrested on Tuesday of last week. A bill of indictment was found against him by the Grand Jury on Thursday, and yesterday the case was called for trial. The District Attorney is a Democrat, and has just been defeated for reelection. He is just as sore over his defeat as Ryon, and was only too happy to be of assistance in railroading one of the opposing party through the courts. When the case was called yesterday, ex-Judge Green, on the part of the defense, asked for a continuance of the case for 24 or 48 hours, as sufficient time had not been allowed to bring his witnesses, some of whom lived at a distance, to Pottsville. The court saw fit to grant the application, whereupon Mr. Ryon, who was in court, stated that he could not be present if the case were not tried at once, and that if a continuance were granted the case might as well be postponed until the next term of court, which begins on the first Monday in January, 1881, when Mr. Ryon will be in his seat at Washington. Ryon's friends, a number of them at least, were greatly surprised at his action, but, unlike him, they had not read a Washington dispatch in Saturday's issue of THE TIMES. This dispatch contained the information that a gang of thieves, taking envelopes franked by John W. Ryon had not been sent to the Dead Letter Office, but were laid aside for contingencies. This piece of intelligence satisfied Mr. Ryon that the defense were well supplied with the necessary ammunition for blowing up his supports. Hence his request for a continuance of the case, which in reality means that he has concluded to retire from the libel suit business.

ACCUSED OF ELECTION FRAUD.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 16.—Charles S. Fisher, a young lawyer, and a worker in the Republican Party, was before United States Commissioner Hoeper to-day, on a charge of attempting fraud upon the ballot-box in the First Ward of this city at the October election. He was arrested at the instigation of District Attorney Richards, and an affidavit was made at Richards's request by the two Republican judges on duty at the polls. Fisher was Supervisor of Election at that precinct. J. G. Stowe, one of the Republican judges, testified that while he was taking out ballots he saw a bunch of ballots beside the box which he knew he had not placed there, and was about to break them off to the floor when Fisher said they were stamped. The ballot-box is so constructed that when tickets are deposited in it each one receives a stamp on the back. On finding that these tickets were stamped they were counted. Afterward, on three different occasions, Fisher pointed out stamped tickets on the floor, two each time, and they were counted. Finally, Moore, the Democratic judge, felt a ticket fall on his knee, and said he saw an arm on that side of him. He found another ticket on the floor. He did not then accuse Fisher of dropping tickets, but Fisher was standing on the side from which the tickets came. Upon close examination of the tickets it was found that the stamp on them differed from the one then in use in the way in which the word "precinct" was abbreviated. At the completion of the count it was found that there were 14 more ballots in the box than there were names on the poll-book. The judges then went through the ballots and found 14 with the wrong stamp on the back. All of these were Republican tickets, and all were thrown out. The testimony is not yet finished.

BURGLARIES AT EAST ORANGE.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., Nov. 16.—Burglaries have become so numerous here that at the last meeting of the Township Committee resolutions were introduced stating that many citizens have been victims of successful burglary, and very many others have been made aware of attempts upon their houses; that it is evident the township is infested by an organized gang of burglars, and that a continuance of this condition of things, without any effort to counteract it, is fast becoming a disgrace to the township, and calculated to do it material inj your vote." "Oh," said he, "you can't do that." "No," said I, "I don't want to." In the evening, as it began to grow dark, I began to fear that there would be trouble about lights at the polling booth, so I went down to a store near the railroad and bought and sent to the polls some candles. As I walked down the hill I was jeered at and called all manner of bad names, but I walked along whistling. A negro said to the Rev. Mr. Cone: "The young man here couldn't do that game on me and them." "Why, what game?" Mr. Cone said: "I haven't seen him do anything to complain of. He has behaved himself well enough. I don't blame those strangers that have been brought here into the county for votes. I blame Dennis Eagan. Eagan ought to be killed, and he will be some day. The people won't stand it."

When the eastern-bound train came all the white men went to the depot. I didn't go down. It was overheard that as soon as the negroes left I was to be laid out, and the matter postponed to-day. I was resolved to witness the count. It isn't so much the way the votes go into the box as the way they come out. I applied for permission to go inside the booth when the counting began, but was refused. I went to the window, and was quickly surrounded by men with dirk-knives. The officers were present, and took me forcibly away back to my station on the hill, where they had built a big fire. I was surrounded by about 50 colored men. A young man, a telegraph operator, came into the crowd and began to talk to me. He either was or pretended to be drunk. He was very agreeable for 10 minutes, and then a white man came up and called him. Thereupon he insisted upon my going with him to take a drink. I declined, and he took offense, but I didn't pay any attention to it. Pretty soon a bell began to be shrung, and the colored men began to slope one by one, and had returned with their shot-guns. They went to wrestling out in the dark. Then they would all cry, "Murder! murder! United States Marshals!" There were two or three of them in our crowd all the time, and every one kept his eye on me. About midnight a colored man came in from the dark very much frightened. He had overheard a conference. They had sent men out on horseback for something. They had said, "Track it to Murphy's office before morning. Wait till the niggers go home, and we will get a pass at him." Pass enough, half my crowd was asleep sleepy, and we had some trouble in waking them. All at once about a dozen white men came into our crowd, and one of them began making a loud speech to them. I heard the message, wondering what they meant. I shortly found out. On one side of me, a moment before, I had seen George Harley watching me with his overcoat thrown back. His hand is in his pistol pocket. He looked south in the direction we had come. I looked the other way, and turned suddenly to face Zack Hines, who had slipped up in the dark behind me with a rope while Cone and club raised to strike. He was four feet away, and the eyes were best directly upon me. I never saw a more murderous face. I partly drew my pistol and faced him. We glared at each other for a terrible half-minute. The colored men about me had noticed my sudden action, and turned and seized their clubs on Zack. Not a word was spoken. Zack withdrew into the dark. Shortly afterward a fire was started near the railroad. I saw by the light of it that they had brought in a green wagon. As I watched the fire I saw a man dressed in a strange and wild fashion start out of the wagon, and that was thrown over the head, and crowned with a hat. He was adjusting his queer disguise. A colored man went down near them and discovered five men in this same rig of white. He saw the face of one man and recognized him. The masters saw the deputy, gave a shout and cried out: "We're ready for your meeting." Then another voice, "Put out your pickets."

Ben McKee, the faithful colored Deputy Marshal, had tried before to induce me to leave the crowd and sneak out into the dark, but I would not go. He kept passing in and out, saying "Come, come," he said. The crowd of crackers at our fire drew out and left us the moment the first shout came up from the markers. They went down by the polling booth and formed a line. Our boys threw a lot of wet wood on our fire, my white hat was pulled down over my face, and I was quickly substituted, and Ben and I walked up the hill into the dark. I believed that I was walking to my death. I expected to find the top of the hill picketed. We passed over it and struck into the woods. We ran a little distance, and found a crowd of five or six colored men behind us. I sent them back. "Get back into town unnoticed if you can. We will make our way to Madison if possible. Good-bye." Ben and I followed the edge of a big swamp for half a mile, and then struck out into it. "Do you big and little swamp?" he said it did. Just as I asked we heard the yells of the crackers in town, that told us we were missed. We heard a pistol shot. Then right ahead of us an owl hooted. Then away to the south-west another owl hooted. "It's a signal," said Ben. "They have the whole country. Can we cross the swamp without going to the road?" I asked again. "Yes." "How far through is it?" "About two miles." "How deep is it?" "About waist-deep." "Come on!" We took to the swamp, and when day had got well into it we found ourselves completely lost. Not a star was to be seen, and the rain was falling—a sort of drizzle. We could hear all the rest of the night the yelling of the drunken crowd. Whether they were in town or not we could not tell. We had been up all night, sat down upon a cypress log and laughed at the funny fix we were in. "We are safe in here, anyway," I said. "Yes," said Ben, "if they don't beat the swamp for us." "It ain't a very big swamp." I said. "Wait till morning, you'll think it big." At daylight We left town at about 8:15 A. M., and we were in the water about four and a half hours.

We got our bearings at daylight, and following the edge of the swamp, passed near the town and got into the woods on the other side, half a mile from the depot. The darkies brought in a shotgun or two and mounted guard, and I went to sleep. The east-bound train reaches Greenville at about 8:30 in the evening. After dark Ben and I, with two colored men, went down to the depot. We stood in the dark under the shade of the barn oaks, near our bonfire of the night before. When the train came, we walked quickly down to the near end of it, and got aboard. We had learned that the crackers had sent up an executive order to that effect. We had believed, that we had ridden muleback to Madison the night before. In the absence of concerted action on the part of our enemies, we expected no trouble. We were followed into the train by a Mr. Jones and a friend, part of the night before. He threw himself into a seat opposite me, and, leaning forward, looked into my face. He evidently didn't understand my change of hats. He kept his hand in his hip-pocket. Ben got up, and, standing between O'Neill and the door, asked him where he was going. "I'm a passenger," said O'Neill. The conductor shouted "All aboard!" and O'Neill got up, went out, and jumped off on the side of the train opposite the depot. I pulled down the flap of my hat, and looked out of the window. The train began to move. "Bang!" I heard a shot, felt a sharp pain in my right shoulder, and saw the bottom of the sash shattered and splintered. I immediately threw myself on the floor of the car, expecting another shot. Some one came in the door. The frightened conductor cut the bell-rope, and rang to the engineer to go ahead. Examination showed that the ball had encountered the hard wood sash and the brass fitting attached to it, lost its force, and then, striking me on the shoulder blade, where it made a bad bruise. I was never at Greenville before. I did not know a single person, black or white, when I went there. I had no conversation with any Democrat there except such as I have related. I was attacked because I was supposed to be a representative of the Republican State Committee.

Of course, processes for the arrest of persons engaged in the frauds and scenes of violence at Madison were issued, and Marshal Darlese promptly sent Deputy Shelly to execute them. The experience of Deputy Shelly below will show what next happened in that interesting locality:

To Joseph A. Darlese, United States Marshal:

SIR: On the evening of the 5th of November I left Jacksonville with warrants for several persons residing in Madison County, Fla., charged with offenses against the laws of the United States. I arrived in Madison on the morning of the 6th, and soon afterward arrested William H. Dial, one of the parties for whom I had a warrant. Soon after this arrest was made I was surrounded by a party of white men, opposite the Court-House, who made me know that this action was in. Among them, one Frank Patterson, said: "We have had enough of these Deputy United States Marshals. Let us hang this ——, and teach them a lesson." I continued making arrests of parties for whom I had warrants until I had in custody William H. Dial, O. P. Florid, Silvanus M. Hankins, George W. Walker, and John Brady. At 3:45 P. M. I left the depot at Madison for Jacksonville with the prisoners above named and quite a number of witnesses whom I had summoned. When about a mile from the depot the bell-cord was pulled and the train stopped. I suddenly found myself in the arms of a body of masked men, who exclaimed: "Here he is; here is the ——." They disarmed me, and it was pulled off the car in a rough manner, and upon hearing the words, "Put the prisoner!" "Now, run to Madison, or words to that effect. My pistol was taken from me and thrown into the woods. About this time one of the persons whom I had summoned jumped from the car and commenced to fire at the train, but he was also disarmed. Some one drew his pistol, they wheeled to face him, and I wrenched loose and jumped aboard the car. The conductor tried to ring the bell for the cars to move forward, but was unable to do so, the bell-cord having been cut in several places. The prisoners were forcibly taken from my custody and taken back toward Madison, and the witnesses, through fright, scattered into the woods, with the exception of four, who came through to Jacksonville. I was unable, with the force at my command, to attempt a rescue, and came on the train to Jacksonville, reaching here this morning at 8 o'clock. I am convinced that these prisoners were rescued by their friends. No show of force was made by any party, nor did any of the prisoners express. All had consented to accompany me to Jacksonville, and the attack upon the train was wholly unexpected, and consequently was unprovided for by me.

J. R. SHELLY, Deputy United States Marshal.

Deputy Shelly's statement is supported by many witnesses. When the train had been had been kidnapped and the prisoners rescued became known in Jacksonville a number of prominent Democrats, perceiving to what extremes matters were tending, telegraphed to their friends in Madison that they "deprecated" their action, and advised them to report to arrest. They did so the next day, and gave bail. Other arrests will follow, and the duty will be performed resolutely and with proper vigilance. Marshal Darlese, District Attorney Blackburn, and their assistants will do their whole duty as the servants of the Government. There will be a term of the United States court in December. The Grand Jury was drawn some time ago, and is said to be composed of fair men.

WORK OF THE RAILROADS

RAPID EXTENSION OF THE NORTHERN PACIFIC.

THE VIGOROUS WORK WHICH HAS BROUGHT THE LINE TO THE BOUNDARY OF MONTANA—PUSHING THE ROAD THROUGH TO THE PACIFIC.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 15.—General Manager Sargent and the party of gentlemen who accompanied him to the end of the Northern Pacific track to witness the ceremony of driving silver spikes into ties at the point where the line of the road crosses the boundary between Dakota and Montana returned to this city this morning. This interesting occasion attracts public attention conspicuously to the rapid progress lately made by the Northern Pacific in its advance across the continent, and makes some notes of its operations of general interest. This railroad, which only a few years ago started out from the then outermost edge of north-western settlement in its bold march across a continent of trackless wilderness, has now accomplished nearly half its journey, and penetrated more than 400 miles into a region before abandoned to the buffalo and the red man. The point where the representatives of the capital of Montana, Helena, and of St. Paul, the capital of Minnesota, have just met to celebrate the entry of the railroad into the former Territory, is in the very heart of the great Sioux Reservation, until lately almost as unknown as the interior of Africa, and the end of the graded road has reached a spot very near that where Gen. Custer and his fated 300 were massacred by Sitting Bull's band only four years ago. The line has now fairly penetrated Montana, has reached the famous Yellowstone Valley, the discovery of whose wonders was heralded so recently, and there now remains only the breadth of a single Territory to cross to bind the Atlantic and Pacific together with a new iron tie, the shortest of all yet projected.

Just previous to the driving of the silver spikes in Montana, Chief Engineer Anderson, of the Northern Pacific, made the journey from the end of the track across Montana, to Lake Pend d'Oreille, in Idaho, where the western construction begins. He traveled on foot and by wagon, making some changes in the route for topographical reasons, and finding a new and easier pass through the mountains. This journey is preliminary to a new and vigorous progress through Montana next Summer, when the road will be carried across the Yellowstone and a long distance into the heart of Montana. This new vigor of construction in the Northern Pacific management is an affair of recent date. Under the old régime of Jay Cooke, the agreement that the road was built from Duluth, at the head of Lake Superior, to Bismarck, on the Missouri, where it rested for seven years after the failures of 1873. Having accumulated resources, the present management recommenced the work of construction last Spring, crossed the Missouri, and pushed on across Dakota. Since that time about 185 miles of track have been laid, including the Missouri Division, from the Missouri to the Little Missouri, and the beginning of the Yellowstone Division, from the Little Missouri to the Yellowstone.

It is the plan of the company to build about 200 miles more next season, and to continue the construction at this rate until the road is completed to the Pacific. The gaps which now remain to be closed are only about 500 miles, of which about one hundred in the breadth of Montana. Over a great part of this distance the road follows the Valley of the Yellowstone, and the construction will not be particularly difficult. The point of difficulty here will be the crossing of the Rocky Mountains, near the Idaho line, and they present a much smaller obstacle here than further south, on the line of the Central Pacific. Beyond the mountains is Lake Pend d'Oreille, from which point a section of the line is completed to Walla Walla, on the Columbia River. The gap between Pend d'Oreille and Pasco, about 300 miles, over the parallel and broken ranges of the Cascade Mountains, is the most difficult of the whole construction, and will probably be the last completed.

The company has not confined itself for the last year to the construction of its main line, but has built up some important feeders. One line has been pushed northward from Casselton, in the Red River Valley, 45 miles, which, it is thought, will ultimately be carried north-westward into the British possessions. A line has been surveyed from Fargo south-westward into the fertile valley of the James River. Still another line is proposed from Bismarck south-westward to the Black Hills. The most important of the subsidiary constructions of the Northern Pacific, however, is the extension of land-grant line southward from Duluth, along the south shore of Lake Superior to the Montreal River. This was practically resolved upon at the late meeting of the Directory in New-York, though the matter was referred for the elaboration of the details of the plan to a committee consisting of representatives of the Northern Pacific and of various roads in the Northern peninsula of Michigan interested in the extension. The entire scheme embraces the building of a line from Duluth to the Sault Ste. Marie to give the Northern Pacific a connection with the Canadian system of roads, and through them with the seaboard. It is probable the entire execution of this plan will be deferred until after the completion of the line to the Pacific.

A ROAD TO CROSS THE HUDSON.

THE NEW-YORK AND NEW-ENGLAND APPROACHING FISHKILL LANDING—TO CONNECT WITH THE ERIE.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Nov. 16.—The New-York and New-England Railroad, whose line to the West now approaches the Hudson, seems likely to reach that river at Fishkill Landing. The engineers of the company have located a line which diverges to the north from the Newburg, Dutchess, and Connecticut Railroad near Wiccopia, and runs part of the distance parallel with the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, to the south side of the Fishkill Landing Long Dock, where, it is said, the New-York and New-England will construct extensive terminal facilities. The work on the road between Brewsters, Putnam County, and Hopewell, Dutchess County, is about done. It seems that the Newburg, Dutchess and Connecticut Road will be used from Hopewell to Wiccopee, or that a competing line will be built between those points. From Fishkill Landing the New-York and New-England will secure a route to the West and to the coal fields by a powerful steam ferry connection with the New-York, Lake Erie and Western at Newburg over the Erie's Newburg Branch. It is said that the ferry will be able to convey across the river freight in bulk and passengers in cars, so that there will be no interruption to either the passenger or freight traffic of the new line. Appearances indicate that the new road will be in actual operation next Summer.

GENERAL RAILWAY NOTES.

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—The Managers and General Passenger Agents of the five great trunk railroad lines to the sea-board met here to-night and arrived at an agreement to restore passenger rates, beginning to-morrow morning, on the basis of $20 to New-York and $21 to Boston.

GALVESTON, Texas, Nov. 16.—A special dispatch to the News from Austin says application has been made for a charter for the New-York, Texas and Mexican Railway, to run from Richmond through the Counties of Fort Bend, Wharton, Jackson, Victoria, and Goliad to Brownsville, with branches to Matagorda Bay, Corpus Christi, and the mouth of the Rio Grande. The incorporators are New-York, Paris, and Texas men.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 16.—At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad to-day the following were elected a Board of Directors: Thomas H. Norton, George P. Raines, R. W. Cole, F. H. Cossitt, W. W. Garth, L. Harris, Napoleon Hill, C. M. McGhee, J. C. Neely, J. D. Rather, R. J. Wilson, Joseph Wheeler, and Addison White. The old officers of the road were retained.

REGULARIZATION OF STATE LAWS.

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—A meeting for the purpose of organizing a National Association for the Secularization of the States was held at the Grand Pacific Hotel yesterday afternoon. More than 60 persons were present, and every section of the Union was represented. The meeting was called to order by E. I. Green, of Salamanca, N. Y., and the Rev. Charles Cravens, of Toledo, was chosen Chairman, and Mr. Green, Secretary. After a roll of the members was made, B. F. Underwood, of Massachusetts; A. J. Spencer, of Wisconsin, and Prof. Denton Snider, of Illinois, were appointed a committee of Correspondence and Organization. Subsequently, they reported a national address, setting forth the means to be taken to secure the secularization of the States. These were defined in the report to be: that no other of religious conference or use of property, including Bible readings, shall cease in Lecturerooms, prisons, public schools, and institutions sustained by taxation; that no property shall be exempt from taxation, and no persons from contributing their just shares to the burdens of the State on account of their being used or engaged in religious effort; that all laws enforcing the observance of one day above another upon religious grounds shall be repealed; that all laws requiring judicial oaths to be in any religious form, or limiting the admissibility of a person to testify, hold office, sit on a jury, or perform any other civil function, because of any lack of religious belief, be repealed. The following were appointed a Finance Committee: Robert G. Ingersoll, of Washington, Chairman; John C. Bundy, Chicago, Secretary; Lucian Prince, Worcester, Mass.; Prof. Philbrick, Iowa City; J. C. Luke, Gardner, Ill.; S. Shed, Fremont, Neb.; S. H. Lamar, Missouri, and Y. B. Fleming, Augusta, Ind.

A FUGITIVE FROM IRELAND.

On Monday Mr. I. Pierrepont Edwards, the British Vice-Consul, received a cable dispatch from the Chief of Police of Londonderry, Ireland, calling for the arrest of Robert Samuel Bowdon, alias Samuel McFadden, a linen merchant of Londonderry, who was charged with forgeries of notes and embezzlement of bankmoney. The amount involved was not down at $8,000. Mr. Edwards communicated with Inspector Byrnes, who, with Detectives Berts and Reilly, went down to Quarantine. At dawn they boarded the Anchoria, of the Anchor Line, and found no difficulty in discovering the man of whom they were in search. He and his baggage were taken to Police Head-quarters. Mr. Edwards saw the prisoner, and then Bowdon was taken before United States Commissioner Osborn, who decided that the British Government had not presented evidence which warranted the detention of the accused under the extradition treaty. Bowdon was discharged, but detectives followed him, and on the receipt of a telegram by Mr. Edwards which contained more information of the crimes of which he is charged he was rearrested, and was taken back to Police Head-quarters. He will be rearraigned in the United States court to-day.

MARRIED IN THE CATHEDRAL.

MR. WILLIAM GIBERT CLARK TO MISS ALICE WOODHULL.

A brilliant wedding took place yesterday afternoon in the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Fifth-avenue which was witnessed by over 2,000 spectators, principally ladies. For nearly half a mile the avenue was lined with rows of carriages. The happy pair were William Gilbert Clark, stepson of Paul I. Thebaud and grand-nephew of Frederick Gilbert, and Miss Alice Woodhull, daughter of Mrs. Mary J. Woodhull, of No. 128 West Thirty-fourth-street. At 4 o'clock the loud peals of the organ announced the arrival of the bridal party. The ushers were L. A. Thebaud, Addison F. Andrews, Louis N. Phelps, A. F. Schermerhorn, Dr. M. W. Rader, C. H. Dyett, and Howell Osborn, and they led the way, followed by the bride leaning on the arm of her cousin, William E. C. Coxe, of Reading, Penn. She was dressed in a white damasse, and court train of white satin, made by Worth. The trimming was of Spanish lace and pearls. She also wore the usual bridal wreath, a white tulle veil, and diamond ornaments. After her arrival at the chancel she was joined by the groom. Then came Vicar-General Quinn, followed by a number of priests. Among the invited guests and relatives of the bridal couple were Mr. and Mrs. Paul L. Thebaud, Mr. and Mrs. J. Thebaud, Miss L. Thebaud, Miss E. Thebaud, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus P. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Dyett and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. H. Tinker, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Larocque and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J. Marie, the Misses Mary E. Kelly, Mrs. Mary Jane H. Kelly, Mr. and Miss Barrett Van Auken, Mr. and Mrs. G. After the reception the couple went to their house in Mount Vernon.

THE BOOT AND SHOE CONVENTION.

DISCUSSING THE M'KAY PATENTS AND THE COMPANY'S OFFERS.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16.—When the Boot and Shoe Convention was called to order to-day there were about 75 delegates present. John J. Ziegler was chosen temporary President. While awaiting the report of the Committee on the Constitution and By-laws, the Chairman suggested that the convention was open for any remarks. At this time a circular from the McKay Sewing Machine Company, signed by Gordon McKay, Trustee, denying that the patents have expired, was distributed among the delegates. Mr. McKay also says that it is proposed to offer terms much more favorable to the company's licensees, and concludes that no application to Congress for the extension of the shoe and process patents has been made or contemplated.

Mr. Krippendorff, of Cincinnati, then discussed the merits of the question in relation to the McKay patents, especially to those called the process patent and patent on the product. He took the ground that the patents had already expired or would shortly, under the patent laws, and if, as now, he said, to stop the payment of royalties. He suggested the appointment of a committee to look into the matter and confer with the McKay Company. Mr. Davis, of Lynn, Mass., reported that he had been interviewed by the Company, and the latter claimed that the patents were valid up to 1881, except the speed patent, which would run until 1887. Mr. Davis said that the Lynn manufacturers had paid the royalty demanded by contract to Mr. McKay, and that they only reserved their rights under the use of his machines. Mr. McKay had suggested that he would sell the machines, in fee simple, for $500 each. That, Mr. Davis said, did not quite suit him, because his machines would cost him over $1,000, and he could be dead long before it would at once take off the 5 cents on each pair of shoes which he was now charging to pay the product royalty. The measure would also be hard upon a small manufacturer, on account of cost, and would be unfair to those who had paid royalties to their competitors. Mr. Mackenzie, of Cincinnati, followed on the other side, contending, first, that the patents of the McKay Company had expired, and, secondly, that these were absurd from the beginning. "Patent the process of making a shoe," exclaimed Mr. Mackenzie; "why, that process was well known before we were born, and must have been known to the Jews of old, and was certainly understood by St. Crispin." He meant to contend for his rights, and would never pay one cent of royalty, to which he believed the McKay Company was not entitled.

A NEW OCEAN STEAMER.

ANOTHER VESSEL TO BE ADDED TO THE NORTH GERMAN LLOYD LINE.

The North German Lloyd Steam-ship Company of Bremen have ordered a steamer to be built by the firm of John Elder & Co., Glasgow, Scotland, to surpass the other well-known steamers of their line in size, speed, and general appointments. The name of this new steamer is to be the Elbe, and she is to be delivered to the company in June of next year, when she will take her place on the line between Bremen, Southampton, and New-York. The Elbe will be of 5,600 tons measurement. Her dimensions will be: Length, 490 feet; breadth of beam, 48 feet; depth of hold, 40 feet. She will be provided with seven water-tight compartments, and will be fitted with four masts, the fore mainmasts square-rigged, and the two mizzenmasts schooner-rigged. Her upper deck fore and aft, till beyond the engine-hatch, will have a hurricane deck, amidships, about 180 feet long, as a promenade deck, solely for first cabin passengers, on which the ladies' cabin will be placed near the mainmast. The arrangement and position of the saloon, cabins, etc., will be on the system on the North German Lloyd steamers, the accommodation for first class passengers, saloon and state-rooms, being placed amidships, forward of the engines, and the second cabin taking the place of in the other steamers of this line is allotted to the first cabin.

The Elbe will be provided with the most approved pattern of steam steering-gear operated from the wheel-house, which will be placed directly under the bridge, and at the forward end of the hurricane deck. The engines will be of 6,000-horse power indicated, and will consist of three cylinders, and speed of 16 miles an hour is expected. The crew will number 160 men, all told. The first cabin saloon amidships will extend from side to side of the steamer, with the state-rooms partly forward and partly aft of the saloon. The second cabin state-rooms will be located on both sides of the second cabin saloon aft. Both first and second cabin state-rooms will be of large size, and accommodate 300 cabin passengers. The upper deck space allotted to second cabin passengers as promenade deck will be on what is usually known as the quarter deck.

OHIO'S GREAT WHEAT CROP.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 16.—The forthcoming November crop report of the Ohio State Board of Agriculture will give the following figures on the wheat crop harvested in 1880: Total number of acres, 2,906,857; total number of bushels, 38,828,794; average per acre, 13 3-10 bushels. The above figures are based on an actual township canvass of the State since the spring, and may be relied upon. The figures for 1879 showed the total of bushels harvested was 41,024,180; average per acre, 17 7-10 bushels. The total for 1878 exceeded any previous crop raised in Ohio by 6,000,000 bushels, and has only been equaled in one year, 1877, by more than 2,000,000 bushels. The above figures show Ohio to be probably the first State in the Union both in the average yield and in total product, unless Illinois exceeds Ohio in the total product.

PROBLEMS OF SCIENCE

FALL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY.

THE CRUISE OF THE BLAKE LAST SUMMER—GIGANTIC PLATEAU TRAVERSED BY THE GULF STREAM—CURIOSITIES OF MINERALOGY—EDISON'S ELECTRIC LIGHT AND BRUSH'S—A BRILLIANT OPENING DAY.

The regular Fall meeting of the National Academy of Sciences opened at 12 o'clock yesterday in the Greek Room of the new Academy building at Columbia College. The November meeting is always devoted purely to the reading of papers on scientific subjects and to the discussion of scientific questions. The membership is not generally very fully represented at these gatherings, many of the members residing at a considerable distance from the City, and not caring to incur the necessary expense save in instances where the programme contains papers they wish to hear and discuss, or when they have special investigations to submit. The number of papers on the programme is only seven, as follows: "Report on the Dredging Cruise of the United States Steamer Blake, Commander Bartlett, During the Summer of 1880," by Prof. Alexander Agassiz; "On the Origin of the Coral Reefs of the Yucatan and Florida Banks," by Prof. Alexander Agassiz; "On Some Recent Experiments in Determining the Electromotive Force of the Brush Dynamo-electric Generator," by Prof. Henry Morton; "Measurement of New Forms of Electric Lamps Operating by Incandescence," by Prof. Henry Morton; "On the Intimate Structure of Certain Mineral Veins," by Prof. Benjamin Silliman; "Mineralogical Notes," by Prof. Benjamin Silliman; "On the Relationship of the Carboniferous Euphoberia to Living and Extinct Myriapoda," by Prof. S. H. Scudder. It must not be concluded, however, that the preceding papers represent the work of the present meeting. On the other hand, a large array of memoirs not registered prior to the opening session finds its way into the list after the registry is nominally closed, and this will be the case to such an extent this Fall that, whereas the programme as printed is a meagre and unsatisfactory one, a very brilliant volume of transactions is anticipated. The session was opened at 12 o'clock yesterday by Prof. O. C. Marsh, of Yale College, whose preliminary address was limited to three laconic sentences: "Gentlemen, the scientific session of the Academy is for the reading and discussion of scientific papers only. I have an invitation to the members from President Barnard to lunch at his house at 2 P. M. The first paper on the list is that of Prof. Agassiz on the dredging cruise of the Blake." Among the members present were President Barnard, of Columbia College; Prof. John S. Newberry, of the School of Mines; Prof. John J. Ziegler, of the Academy of Sciences; Prof. O. C. Coffin, United States Navy; Prof. Torrey; F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania; Prof. C. A. Young, of Princeton; Prof. Wolcott Gibbs, of Harvard; Prof. Alexander Agassiz, of Cambridge; Dr. J. Hammond Trumbull, of Hartford; T. Sterry Hunt, of Boston; Prof. Henry Morton, of Hoboken; Prof. Eaton, of Yale; Prof. Edward C. Pickering, of Cambridge; Prof. E. H. M. Peters, of Hamilton College; Prof. Edward D. Cope, of the University of Pennsylvania; Prof. H. A. Newton, of Yale; Profs. Henry Morton and Wm. J. Mayer, of the Stevens Institute; Profs. John N. Draper and Henry Drowne, of the University of the City of New-York; Mr. Lewis M. Rutherfurd, of this City; Profs. Charles F. Chandler and E. N. Rood, of Columbia, and Prof. James Hall, of Albany.

The paper on the list was that of Prof. Agassiz on the dredging cruise of the Blake, whose work has been spoken of in terms of the highest compliment in a recent number of Nature. After giving some details respecting the previous cruises of the Blake and the points intended to be elucidated by the present expedition, Prof. Agassiz said the results obtained had shown that the deep-sea fauna extended to a limit considerably higher than was formerly supposed, namely, to a depth of about 100 fathoms. Although this was the extreme limit of the deep-sea belt of animal life, which he should style the continental fauna, and which extended from a depth of about 450 feet to one of 150 fathoms. To observe exactly the connection and relation of these fauns to each other was the chief purpose of the cruise of the Blake last Summer. The coast of South Carolina was selected as a base of operations, and the region to be examined was laid out in regular sections. The first procedure was to run a line south of Cape Hatteras in an easterly direction; another north of Hatteras, and a third at Cape May. Each of these lines began at a depth of about 150 fathoms, and extended completely across the Gulf Stream. For a distance of 150 miles from the shore a greater depth than 150 fathoms was not found to occur at any point embraced in the survey, and there was very little variation from a general average, thus showing that the Gulf Stream courses along an immense plateau, which was probably the original limit of the continent. The breadth of the gigantic submarine plain was from 130 to 150 miles. Off the coast of South Carolina, at a depth of about 100 fathoms, the margin of an abrupt and very rapid declivity was found, and then for some distance a deep submarine valley. After this interval was crossed the second plain was equally abrupt, the interval merely the stream has not yet been determined, but its general topographical relations are now pretty well understood.

Prof. Agassiz next described the external margin of this vast submarine plateau and its extreme fertility in animal life. For a distance of 20 miles off the South Carolina shore our submarine explorers never carried a depth of more than 250 to 275 fathoms; but when the outer edge was once reached it was abruptly and distinctly marked, and what startling, the ground fell for the first ship's length after the declivity commenced full 150 fathoms, and for three ship's lengths 400, or 1,350 feet. It was along this margin that the Blake was enabled to intercept the continental elevated plateau itself, which adjusted the shore was practically swept clear of silt and mud by the ever-restless currents coursing over it; but upon its extreme margin the deposit was something enormous, and the expedition found at the outfall of the Gulf Stream a wealth of marine life larger than at any point in the tropics. The shot would sometimes sink from 12 to 20 feet into this slimy mass, which had been cleaned from the level bottom by the action of the water, and here dropped in an enormous drift, which was peopled with submarine fauna. Of course, owing to this freedom from silt, the plateau could not furnish food for any large development of animal life, and it was consequently concentrated in a narrow belt at the margin, which furnished an interesting field for investigation. The deposit did not appear to embrace any great number of species, and was mainly composed of the commonest forms, rather than for variety or range. In summing up the results of his Summer's work in connection with the Blake, Prof. Agassiz reported that the important point was the proof that the deep-sea fauna of the Atlantic Ocean descended shoreward to a depth very considerably less than had been heretofore supposed by naturalists. It had been ascertained that it was substantially identical with that of the Gulf of Mexico, while the fauna of the Gulf Stream was a deep-sea fauna of the type he had styled continental. The current of the Gulf Stream being extremely strong, its track was peculiarly barren in forms of animal life, and the extension of the continental fauna from the West Indies northward was sufficiently only along the edge of the plateau he had previously described. He would allude, in conclusion, to the great success of the expedition. Their facility in dredging had become something extraordinary by long practice, and the work they had been able to accomplish in six weeks was wonderful. When the Blake made her first cruise one haul a day was considered pretty active employment; the last day they were out they made eight hauls.

Prof. Benjamin Silliman followed Prof. Agassiz with an interesting paper on the "Intimate Structure of Certain Mineral Veins," principally gold-bearing, which was listened to with marked attention. The microscopic structure of quartz was held, a familiar subject to all who had given it any attention. Respecting certain curious cavities existing in quartz crystals, he said that in the centre would be found a minute and very transparent bubble, surrounded by an opaque substance, owing to a difference in refraction between the inclosed liquids. That the interior bubble was composed of liquefied gas, Prof. Silliman had recently had occasion to verify in some specimens of rock brought from Arizona. After giving a paragraph to the description of the phenomena, Prof. Silliman took the curious cavities in quartz crystals to which he had previously adverted, and gave some results of their study with powerful lenses. When a thin section of the rock had been prepared by grinding, contours of these cells was shown well by transmitted light. Sometimes they were circular in outline, sometimes elliptical, sometimes of dumb-bell or hour-glass shape. The central bubble within could be discerned in a state of intense agitation, whirling round and round upon its axis like a top rapidly spun. It was due to the presence of liquefied carbonic acid, and could be expanded so as to fill the whole cavity by holding the stump of a recently extinguished, but still lighted, vesuvian beneath the under surface of the slide upon which the section was mounted. If the room in which the examination was conducted was very warm, this expansion took place, and the bubble was obliterated, or if the section was even carried for a little while in the vest-pocket the bubble did not appear on microscopic inspection, but when kept perfectly cold were somewhat numerous. He had examined many sections, however, and had not found so many of the cavities filled with carbonic acid as had been described by previous observers, although cavities containing water were very numerous—some millions to the cubic inch. The manner in which gold is precipitated by the sulphate of protoxide of iron was next taken up; but Prof. Silliman did not accept as universal the association between sulphurets and gold maintained by the earlier mineralogists. Gold did often occur entirely unconnected with sulphurets. He would mention in this connection a deposit of quartz lying on the line between the States of Colorado and Nevada, which was very rich in gold but utterly destitute of sulphurets. The Indio vein, the feldspathic element of which had undergone decomposition, was, indeed, of peculiar importance to science on account of its signal additions to mineralogy. Owing to the aridity and dryness of the climate the decomposition of the feldspar had resulted in an entirely different class of salts, in place of the sulphates generally associated with auriferous deposits.

The last paper before the intermission was a brief note by Prof. James Hall, of Albany, on the relation of the Oneonta sandstone to other sandstone deposits of the Catskill group.

The Academy reassembled at 8 P. M., after lunching with President Barnard, and the reading of papers was resumed with a memorandum by Prof. Wolcott Gibbs on a "New Method of Analysis." The purpose of the paper was to give a more systematic development to the applications of electrolysis to the determination of metals in solution. By means of diagrams on the blackboard Prof. Gibbs explained the method in common use, by which the metal is thrown down as a precipitate. He then showed, on the board, a diagram of his own method, in which the solution is placed in a glass beaker with a layer of mercury at the bottom, and a strong current of electricity passed through it, which precipitates the metal, the latter forming an amalgam with the mercury. The determination is made by weighing the beaker, mercury, &c., before and after the experiment, and calculating from these data the amount of the metal. Prof. T. Sterry Hunt said the paper of Prof. Gibbs would strike most of the members like a revelation, and inquired what battery power was required. Prof. Gibbs replied that the weaker the battery the longer would be the time required, and vice versa. With a power equal to a Bunsen battery of 40 or 50 cells would precipitate 15 grammes of zinc from a solution in from 30 to 35 minutes. A better power of two or three cells would probably precipitate three or four grammes of zinc in an hour.

But the papers of popular interest after recess were the two by Prof. Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute, whose fields appear in the programme. The first related to the determination of electro-motive force in the Brush electrical generator; the second to the measurement of new forms of electric lamps operating by incandescence, and the two followed each other as a

SUNDAY-SCHOOL METHODS

DISCUSSION AT A LARGE CONVENTION IN KINGS COUNTY.

THE NECESSITY FOR GOOD TEACHERS—THE CHURCH AND THE SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

The fourth annual convention of the Kings County Sunday-schools was held yesterday in the Tabernacle Methodist Episcopal Church, Manhattan-avenue and Noble-street, Greenpoint. The object of these annual meetings is to discuss the best methods of conducting Sunday-school work and to increase the popular interest in it—an interchange of views which, it is claimed, has been productive of great benefits. There are in Kings County 260 Sunday-schools, representing an attendance of 30,000 scholars. The number of schools which send delegates to these conventions is on the increase, and the gatherings are the largest of their kind brought together in this country. Yesterday 125 Kings County schools were represented, and Orange, Newark, and Kingston also sent representatives. The church, which has a seating capacity of 1,200 persons, was filled at each of the three sessions. It was decorated with bunting and silken banners, and a national flag was hung out from the stained glass window overlooking Manhattan-avenue. At 10 o'clock the convention was called to order by Deacon John D. Prince, and John J. Lewis was appointed temporary Chairman. The coronation hymn was sung, a Biblical selection was read by the Rev. Lewis Francis, and prayer was offered by the Rev. D. Henry Miller, D. D. The Rev. W. H. Simonson, in a brief address, gave greeting to the delegates. The Committee on Nominations reported a board of officers for the next year, with Russell W. McKee as President, and they were elected.

The discussion of subjects was next in order. Speakers were given 10 minutes each, in a number of cases gentlemen proved so prolix at the outset that the Chairman's gavel had to cut them off in the middle of their arguments. A general discussion followed the presentation of each subject, in which delegates were allowed three minutes to relate individual experiences or to make suggestions. The first two papers, presented by H. E. Griffing, of Oliver Chapel, and Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, referred to the encouragements and discouragements of Superintendents and teachers. The Rev. Dr. C. B. Taylor, of the Greenpoint Presbyterian Church, partially finished the reading of a paper on "How to Command the Interest of the Church in Behalf of the Sunday-school," in which he made the argument that children must be taught somewhat at home. The Rev. T. A. K. Gessler, of the Central Baptist Church, discussed the subject "How to Develop the Teaching Power in the Church." Everybody, he maintained, was not fitted to teach, and only those in the Church who possessed the qualifications should be selected. He did not believe the Sunday-schools would lose anything if one-half their teachers were wiped out and the classes were turned over to the charge of those capable of instructing them. There should be Biblical teaching from the pulpit, for topical breaches, and a great deal more in his judgment, of great benefit to the development of the teaching power in the Church. He suggested that every church have a training-school from which teachers should be selected, and in which none but those possessing the requisite qualifications should be retained.

Superintendent Bernhard said, in the general discussion which followed, that he was once curious to know what proportion of his Sunday-school scholars attended the church service. He counted members of the church in the membership of the school. He also counted 30 persons who were sleeping through their Pastor's sermon. Three of these were Deacons. [Laughter.] "In fact," he said, "we have a Deacon in our church who sleeps regularly every Sunday morning." The Deacon's Pastor says the only way he can prevent his napping is to keep his eye on him during the whole sermon. If it wanders for an instant to another portion of the church, the Deacon's head nods." [Loud laughter.] Dr. Porter believed that this everlasting attempt to draw the line of demarkation between the Church and Sunday-school was fatal to the work. Dr. Miller called the Doctor's attention to the fact that in the neighborhood was a church that had from the equivalent of below efficient and trustworthy Pastor and Superintendent, neither being willing to yield when both had designated the same night for a meeting in the church. The speaker believed that it should be recognized that the church has the right to control the school.

The afternoon session was opened with prayer by the Rev. E. A. Helmer. Darwin R. James, Superintendent of the Throop-Avenue Mission, in his paper on "Punctuality and Regularity of Teachers and Scholars," said that in his 20 years' experience he had been compelled to recognize the fact that punctual teachers made punctual scholars, just as teachers who were tardy made tardy scholars, and in many instances broke up the classes altogether. Especially was this the case in mission schools. Teachers, he said, should exercise almost everything to be punctual. "The Selection and Management of the Library" was discussed by the Rev. William H. Ingersoll, a teacher in the Lafayette-Avenue Presbyterian Church, who said that he had compiled the Sunday-school libraries. The day of such romances as "Tim and his Dog" and "What a Town Pump Said" had gone past, and it was folly to litter the shelves with them. Old minds as well as young were to be instructed by this library. Historical, biographical, and theological works and missionary literature should be selected, and, although there was an intolerable amount of trash in the fiction of to-day, it was not right to exclude works of this class altogether. Certain of fictions were essentially valuable for library shelves. James M. Craig, of the Greene-Avenue Presbyterian Sunday-school, read a paper on "Entertainments and Rewards." Frank Beard illustrated by means of the blackboard the benefits of blackboard instruction to small children in the school-room. He considered the acrostic an excellent device for impressing symbols upon young memories. The blackboard in the hands of crude or too profound artists had its drawbacks. He illustrated the point by drawing a bad-looking angel, with the conventional wings and harp, on the blackboard of a Brooklyn Sunday-school. The children scanned the figure critically, and when the hymn was given out "I want to be an angel, and with the angels stand," there was a marked want of spontaneity and enthusiasm in their responses. In his paper "What Constitutes the Efficiency of the Superintendent," Richard Oliver, of the First Baptist Mission, summed up what he considered to be a Superintendent's qualifications. They were kindness, cheerfulness, truthfulness, and decision. The man must possess, besides, a love for the work and be not easily discouraged. Charles T. Woodwin, of the Fifth-Avenue Baptist Church, read a paper on "Conditions Affecting the Teacher's Efficiency as Related to the Lesson, to His Personal Life, and to the Scholar; how to Inspire Enthusiasm in the Teacher," "Securing and Retaining Scholars" was treated by R. P. Shafter, of the Church of the Evangel; "Elections, Social Gatherings, Picnics," by Mrs. Ingersoll; "The Benefit of the Session, Opening and Closing Services, the Superintendent's Part in Instruction and Review," by T. J. Tilney, of the Central Congregational Church, and "The Importance of Teaching the Catechism as Embodying Formulated Truth," by the Rev. W. J. Turner, of St. Matthew's Church, and Episcopal Church.

Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, of the Lafayette-Avenue Presbyterian Church, was greeted with applause when he stepped to the platform to speak on "Conversion of the Scholar and the Hold on the Scholar after Conversion; how to Interest the Scholar in the Service of the Church. Conversion should be, he said, as early in life as the early morning of youth when it meant a life of service. The child who was old enough to attend the public school was old enough to be a convert. What was the use of having a fold in some of the lambs that had to be kept out in the cold? Boys and girls should be set to work in the service as soon. They could teach, by their influence, where the Pastor and Superintendent, or even the teacher, could never reach. Let them have their associations, their needed doctrinal teaching, in which they can drill and learn to speak. Pastors must make their pulpits attractive. The man who can't hold the children's attention was never called by God to the ministry. Let their Pastor's reasoning and language be plain and simple. Let them make the future leaders of the country are on the towpath to-day. [Applause.] See to it that you feed them wisely and that you instill into their minds proper Christian principles.

At the evening session the following subjects were discussed: "Infant Class," by John H. Mallory; "Adult Bible Class," by R. W. Raymond, Ph. D.; "Missionary Work in the Sunday-school," by E. F. Gilbreath; "What Mission Schools Have Accomplished," by the Rev. Albert G. Lawson; "The Importance of Teaching the Young Child with the Word of God," by the Rev. W. F. Crafts; "The Supreme End to be Sought in Sunday-school Work," by the Rev. A. McCullagh. An overflow meeting was held in the Noble-Street Presbyterian Church, in which Sunday-school work in its various phases was discussed by clergymen and laymen as well.

THE CARE OF THE HARBOR.

At a meeting of the Pilot Commissioners yesterday, a communication was received from Health Officer Smith, complaining that masters of vessels are in the habit of taking their departure, with the connivance of the pilots in Quarantine, before his arrival. This is a direct violation of law, and he proposes to prosecute offenders in future. The Secretary was ordered to call the attention of the pilots to the matter. The Secretary was also instructed to write to the Secretary of War, and request the removal, as soon as possible, of the wreck of the German bark Samarang from the south channel bar, complaint having been made that it lies in a position dangerous to navigation. Lieut. Commander Cowan reported that he had made a partial survey of Flushing Bay, and saw no objection to Gen. Newton dumping the sand which he intends to dredge from the west side of the bay into the water on the west side. Where the average depth is but about four feet, making it unavailable except for the smallest craft. Gen. Newton intends to make a channel on the east side with an average depth of seven feet. Inspector Conway also reported that five loaded mud-scows belonging to the Department of Docks were aground on the 15th inst. on the northern end of the east bank. They floated off after the sand was washed out and two tugs subsequently pushed up by Pilot-boat No. 8.

A FREE USE OF THE CLUB.

HOW A POLICEMAN USED HIS LOCUST ON A PRISONER.

Weak from loss of blood and scarcely able to walk, with his head bandaged and his clothes bespattered and stained with blood, James Radigan, a young Irishman, was arraigned before Justice Smith, in the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, by Patrolman James McCool, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, who charged him with assault and battery. The officer had a slight cut on his nose which was covered by a brave piece of court-plaster. He said that Radigan was in the liquor-beer saloon of Adam Roth, No. 406 Sixth-avenue, and wouldn't go out when ordered to leave, and he (the officer) was then sent for to put him out. While endeavoring to do so he was assaulted by Radigan, and he clubbed him in self-defense. The prisoner had received a terrible beating. His head was cut in several places, his wrists were swollen and bruised of skin, and the flesh about them was bruised and discolored. His hands were swollen to twice their natural size, and his body was covered with bruises and contusions. He said he came from County Mayo, Ireland, and had been in this country about two months. On Monday night he went into the saloon referred to and offered for sale some religious pictures and books containing a history of the "Apparitions of Knock." He had a glass of beer and a glass of whisky in the place. There was some dispute about the whisky and he was ordered out. He refused to go, and the officer was sent for to eject him. The policeman dragged him into the street, clubbed him on the head, arms, and body in the most inhuman manner. In the street the officer was joined by two other policemen, who also clubbed him. They put "nippers" on his hands and dragged him to the station-house. He admitted having struck Officer McCool, but not until the policeman had struck him with his club.

Justice Smith committed Radigan for trial in default of $500 bail. The prisoner was taked into the prison and placed in one of the hospital cells. He appears to be a quiet, inoffensive man, but his conversation betokens that his mind is somewhat unsettled by religious mania. He will be examined by the prison physicians to-day. The conduct of the policeman will be investigated by the Police Commissioners.

PAYMASTER NELSON ON TRIAL.

OFFICERS TESTIFYING TO HIS EFFICIENCY AND HONESTY.

The court-martial of Major James H. Nelson for an alleged defalcation while Paymaster in the United States Army, was resumed yesterday in the rooms of the Military Service Institution on Governor's Island. In the absence of Brig.-Gen. Israel Vogdes, President of the court, Gen. Nelson Davis presided. The other members of the court present were: Lieut.-Col. John M. Brennan, First Artillery; Lieut.-Col. Albon P. Howe, Second Artillery; Lieut.-Col. Augustus De Russy, Third Artillery; Major Clement L. Best, First Artillery; Major John Mendenhall, First Artillery; Capt. R. H. Hall, Tenth Infantry, and Capt. William D. Harkins, Ninth Infantry, recorder. Major H. K. Wood was the first witness. He testified that he had known Major Nelson since 1868 in the service of the Departments of the Lakes and the Military Division of the Pacific, and that he had always regarded his character and ability as Paymaster, whose integrity was beyond question. He believed this opinion was held by all the officers of the department and division.

Major William R. Gibson, of the Paymaster's Department at Fort Leavenworth, said he was Inspector-General of the Paymaster's Department in 1876, and was sent to Norfolk, Va., to investigate sundry charges against Paymasters in the Department of Virginia and North Carolina. He understood that Major Nelson was at that station at the time, though he was not one of the Paymasters whose accounts were under investigation. The accounts of a number of Paymasters were then investigated. Irregularities in that department were general. Paymasters were receiving interest on Government money deposited in the banks, and were also cutting off and retaining the coupons of Government 7-30 bonds, in which the Army was being paid. Witness considered Major Nelson one of the best officers in the department. He had the reputation of being efficient and trustworthy. At the close of this testimony an adjournment was taken until this morning at 11 o'clock.

COST OF OPENING STREETS.

The report of Meyer Butzel, Henry Lewis, and Joseph Blumenthal, Commissioners for the opening of One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street and 12 other streets and avenues in the Twenty-third Ward, was presented to Judge Lawrence, in the Supreme Court, yesterday. It awards $668,659 to property-owners for land taken from them, and states the Commissioners' expenses at $46,471 46. Corporation Counsel Whitney moved to confirm the report, but said his motion was peremptory as he deemed it his duty to call the attention of the court to facts stated in an affidavit made by Deputy Controller McDaniel, which might make it proper for the court to send the report back to the commissioners for amendment. The affidavit referred to averred that, as the eastern, western, and westerly ends of One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street were laid out by previous commissions, it was improper for the present Commissioners to make more than mere nominal awards for land there taken. Mr. Whitney thought also that the act of 1874, under which the Commissioners proceeded, is unconstitutional, because its title does not define the purposes of its provisions.

Mr. John C. Shaw, who appeared in support of the report, said it was unprecedented to present to the court such an affidavit as that of the Deputy Controller, which regarded matters adjudicated by the Commissioners. Judge Lawrence admitted that the objection was not to present affidavits, except as to frauds, against the confirmation of a report of Commissioners, but said he would take the paper. Mr. John H. Strahan, who appeared against the report, said he agreed with Mr. Whitney; but thought further that the work of the Commissioners would have to be done over because they did not conform to the act of 1869 respecting street openings. Other objections were made by counsel for property-owners who have been assessed for benefits. Judge Lawrence reserved his decision.

The steam-ship Arizona, of the Guion Line, sailed for Liverpool yesterday. The following European steam-ships will sail to-day: the England, of the National Line, and the Gallia, of the Cunard Line, for Liverpool, and the Ferdinand de Lesseps, of the French line, for Havre. Several officers of the French Navy are among the passengers of the last-named ship. The cabin lists which have been received are as follows:

STANTON WILL CASE TESTIMONY.

Three witnesses testified yesterday in the trial of the contest over the will of Julia M. Stanton, who left the bulk of her property to her daughter, Julia M. Field, two of the witnesses being for the contestant. Wheeler H. Peckham, counsel for Mrs. Eliza L. Tucker, the contesting daughter, offered in evidence a number of letters written by Mrs. Field to various persons anterior to the making of the will, including one to Mr. John J. Cisco, urging him to use his influence with Mrs. Stanton in her behalf. Mr. Charles A. Jackson, counsel for the proponent, testified that he had been acquainted with Mrs. Stanton, and that she had impressed him as a woman of surprisingly bright mind and extremely imperious will. She preferred to reside in Paris because she had found she could live there cheaper than in this country. Mr. Jackson's main object in testifying in the case was to show that Mrs. Stanton was not a person who could be easily influenced by any one. Cross-examined by Mrs. Peckham, he said he was introduced to Mrs. Stanton by Mrs. Field in Paris, and that his conversations with her related to business matters. The trial will be continued to-day.

MERCHANTS APPEALING TO CONGRESS.

The Board of Managers of the Produce Exchange yesterday adopted the following resolutions presented by the Committee on Trade:

Whereas, The views expressed in the petition of the New-York Produce Exchange to the Treasury Department, dated Oct. 7, 1880, are firmly held by that body in the interests of commerce; and

Whereas, It appears from the reply of the Assistant Secretary, dated Oct. 13, 1880, that the department does not deem it expedient to take action in accordance therewith, it being the expressed opinion of the department that the Customs business should be conducted in such a manner as to protect private interests except where remedy can be which would justify a sacrifice of such interests to the public good; and

Whereas, Action by Congress alone is the objectionable clause of the circular of Dec. 12, 1879, is desirable; therefore

Resolved, That this Exchange invite the New-York Chamber of Commerce and other leading commercial bodies to unite with it in bringing the subject before the next Congress through the representatives of the various districts in which such bodies exist, with a view to its full consideration by the proper committee of Congress and its action thereon.

CAPT. HADS AT GALVESTON.

GALVESTON, Nov. 16.—Capt. J. B. Eads, the eminent engineer, and his staff were met here by a delegation of citizens, headed by Mayor Leonard, and conducted to the Cotton Exchange. They afterward returned to the steamer Whitney and resumed their voyage to Vera Cruz.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The date printed on the wrapper of each paper denotes the time when the subscription expires.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, higher barometer, southerly, veering to cooler north or west, winds, clear or partly cloudy weather.

The Presidential pension fund has been discussed by the press of the country with a degree of thoroughness which leaves nothing to be desired. There is a decided preponderance of opinion that such a fund ought to be provided, though the journals which hold this view are not at all unanimous in thinking that it ought to be done by private subscription. On this point we believe the sentiments of the people to be very decidedly against throwing such a question into the arena of Congressional debate. The people can, and we believe will, take the matter into their own hands, as on the whole the most dignified, because the only spontaneous, way of supplying an admitted want. If our contemporaries who have given the scheme their approval will follow the example of the Canton Repository, and invite their readers to send them subscriptions, the growth of the fund will be greatly accelerated. A journalistic syndicate would be for a work of this kind more efficacious than a syndicate of bankers.

If any man accustomed to the ways of a free and civilized society can read the narrative which we publish this morning of the experience of the Hon. JOHN P. VARNUM, United States Commissioner, in Florida, on election day, without indignation, we do not envy his sense of justice. The story bears the marks of straightforward honesty and sincerity, and presents a picture of lawlessness, brutality, and cowardice on the part of the Florida Democrats which might make even Mr. HEWITT blush. Such facts do not appeal to partisan feeling; they appeal to the pride which we all have in the free institutions under which we are supposed to live, and under which the citizens of the Northern States do live. They afford another proof of the necessity, which was already well established, of a vigorous policy for the protection of the suffrage by all the power of the national Government.

Gov. WILTZ, of Louisiana, has appointed ex-Chief-Justice MANNING, of the State Supreme Court, to be United States Senator in place of SEGREGATE. As Mr. SPOFFORD was not elected Senator, and as even the Democratic majority of the Senate failed to put him in the place awarded to KELLOGG, the action of Gov. WILTZ simply means that the Democrats are to leave no device untried to secure control of that body. The chances of reopening the Kellogg-Spofford contest during the short session and after the death of the contestant would seem to be sufficiently slim. But the arrogant recklessness of the class of Southern Democrats of whom Gov. WILTZ is a fair sample is not likely to be restrained by any consideration either of political probability or of partisan fairness. If the regeneration of the Democratic Party is to come through the influence of its Southern wing, it will certainly not be by the aid of the disreputable gang who control the politics of Louisiana.

There's urgent need of legislation to restrain the reckless prodigality with which the Board of Aldermen give away valuable franchises involving the use of the City streets and the enjoyment of some more or less profitable monopoly. Probably as much can be done for the relief of New-York taxpayers by the increase of Municipal revenues as by the reduction of Municipal expenditures, but as each successive Board of Aldermen signalizes the closing weeks of its existence by the passage of a batch of jobs at the expense of the revenues of the City, it is obvious that the chances of reducing taxation from this source are rapidly decreasing. If the Senate committee could secure some criticism of the neglect or waste of the possibilities of a large income which are presented in licenses, fees, and franchises from a witness with as much acumen and boldness as are exhibited by Mr. EREHART in his testimony about Police management, they might find the basis for some very seasonable legislation.

According to law, Mayor COOPER will today appoint seven members of the Board of Education to succeed those whose terms expire on the 1st of January. Mr. COOPER made a mistake last year in strengthening the Roman Catholic influence in the Board by reinforcing it with two new members, Messrs. FLYNN and ARNEDO. The public do not realize how powerful and aggressive, not to say insolent, that influence has become in the management of our public school system. The present President of the board has seen fit to increase its potency by placing some of the most important committees under the control of the Catholic members and those who habitually act with them. The most powerful committee of the board is that on the Nomination of Trustees, since it appoints the men who appoint the teachers. Of that committee Mr. KELLY is Chairman, and he, together with Messrs. MORIARTY, TRAUD, WEST, and WATSON, who are either Catholics or who act solidly in the Catholic interest, constitute a majority of the members. Messrs. WEST, TRAUD, and WATSON, as well as Mr. DONNELLY, one of the most influential Catholic members of the board, are among those whose places are to be filled to-day. If Mayor COOPER fails to take account of the dangers attending the control of the public schools by Catholic influence, the Legislature will, in view of the probable action of Mr. GRACE in completing the mischief already afoot, be compelled to take some action in the premises.

DEMOCRATS AND CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

The friends of civil service reform will perceive with pleasure a movement in the Democratic press in favor of reinforcing that reform by legislation at the approaching session of Congress. Articles in support of this proposition have already appeared in the Buffalo Courier and in the New-York World, and it is sustained by arguments which are unquestionably sound and pertinent. That the proposition will be accepted, that the leaders of the majority in Congress can be persuaded that it is their duty as well as their interest to abolish patronage in the civil service by law, is not, we are sorry to say, very probable. But it is at least an evidence that the cause of reform is making decided progress when such a discussion is started in good faith in Democratic journals of the standing of the two we have mentioned.

During the canvass the World ventured on this subject, but with an avowed motive which gave its articles a savor of comicality seldom obtained so rich anywhere off the stage of the opera bouffe. It contented itself with hinting that Gen. HANCOCK was disposed to disregard politics in any appointments which he might have to make, but it pointed out that he would really be compelled to displace Postmasters who used their official position or their influence to promote the circulation of Republican newspapers to the prejudice of the World. This curious application of its fine reasoning in regard to the principle of a non-partisan service prevented the public from taking the latter as serious—though far be it from us to insinuate that anything bearing on the circulation of the World is not very serious indeed to that journal.

At present, however, the matter is approached in a very different spirit. The arguments addressed to the majority in Congress are, in substance, that the principle of appointments for fitness only, to be tested by examination and probation, is safe and practicable; that an act embodying it would undoubtedly meet the approval of the President; that the Democratic Party cannot, in any sense, hope for any of the patronage to be distributed by the incoming Administration, and, therefore, would lose nothing by the passage of such a law, and, finally, that such an act would be an excellent foundation for the Democratic plan of campaign in 1884, and might supply the party with the "issue" of which they stand so sorely in need. With the exception of the last, these arguments are obviously correct. The principle which underlies the reform begun by Mr. HAYES is not only a good principle, but it is one which, in the long run, must prevail, because the affairs of a great nation cannot forever be carried on without it. The theory that from 50,000 to 100,000 appointments can be properly made on the personal judgment of the small number of men intrusted with the selection in this country is exploded in practice. Appointments are no longer, as a rule, made on this theory, but mainly to gratify party leaders and managers, with a reservation, more or less strict, that the persons appointed shall be reasonably fit for the places. The result is that we get inferior service—skill, knowledge, and fidelity being made secondary, and partisan activity and influence being most regarded. And, even when appointments are, in the first instance, fairly good, the appointees are very insecure in their tenure, and the advantages of experience, honorable rivalry for promotion, and continuous discipline are almost wholly lost.

If an act were to be passed at the approaching session making obligatory and permanent the system which has been partially and tentatively applied in the Federal offices in this City and in Buffalo, there is no doubt that Mr. HAYES would approve it. He would be very glad of a chance to sign it, for whatever defects in tact, resolution, and firmness he has shown—and these are by no means few—he has a very sincere desire to see the reform fully established. It is quite reasonable to suppose that he will invite Congress, at the opening of the session, to pass such a law. He has already done so in the most urgent manner, and it is not likely that his zeal has cooled. Should Gen. GARFIELD be animated by the same feeling that President HAYES has been, such a law would be a great relief to him. It is hardly to be hoped, indeed, that very much will be done in the way of reform without the aid, and even the indirect compulsion, of Congress. The present majority could congratulate itself on having done an incalculable service to the country and to the incoming President if it should pass such a law.

The argument as to party interest, however, will not commend itself to the mind of the average Democratic statesman. It is true that Democratic members of Congress will get no patronage from Gen. GARFIELD's Administration. They can expect none. But we do not believe that they will be found willing to prohibit a general redistribution of offices whenever their party gets the opportunity to make it. And in all frankness, why should they? They know perfectly well that the hope of office is the strongest motive that animates the active members of their party organizations at every national election. It is practically the only strong motive. That is what was in their hearts when they cried out for a change. It was no desire or expectation of bringing about a change in the policy of the Government, for they strenuously denied that they intended to make any. The only well-defined and practical change which they contemplated was the substitution of Democrats for Republicans in the Federal service. We may add that it was the influence of the blind, selfish, unreasoning greed for place which made the last Democratic campaign so detestable. Mere partisanship would not have done it. Doubtless it is the perception of this fact which impels Democratic journals to propose a permanent and authoritative reform of the civil service. Their editors feel the shame and the folly of the excesses to which the old system has driven their party managers. But the managers themselves do not feel it, and the members of Congress least of all. In inviting them to abolish patronage by act of Congress, their journals are practically asking them to commit political suicide, which would, perhaps, be a wise, and certainly a patriotic, thing for them to do, but we hardly think that they will do it.

THE CALIFORNIA REPUBLICAN ELECTOR.

The defeat, in California, of one of the six Democratic candidates for Presidential Elector does not in any way affect the general result, but it illustrates very forcibly the folly of the Democratic Party, as well as the weakness of the Electoral system. It is possible that, under certain contingencies, the full vote of the State of California might be needed to decide the national election in one way or another. If this were the case, and one vote should decide which of two Presidential candidates was elected, one can imagine how severe would be the strain upon the forbearance of the people who must see their will thwarted by the unpopularity of a candidate for Presidential Elector. If one vote were to determine whether GARFIELD or HANCOCK had received a majority of all the Electoral votes cast, the failure of one man to receive a majority of all the votes cast in this State for Presidential Electors would give rise to heated debate, if not to more serious consequences. Happily, so far as the general result is concerned, the entire Electoral vote of California is of no account whatever. Either party may have it or lose it and still remain short of the requisite number or with more than enough votes, as the case might happen in either instance.

DAVID S. TERRY, the man who received the smallest number of votes cast for any man on the California Democratic Electoral ticket, is best known as the slayer of BRODERICK. In 1859, while the quarrel between BUCHANAN and the Liberal or anti-Lecompton Democrats was at its height, BRODERICK, then a Senator from California, threw his vote and influence against the Buchanan or pro-slavery policy of the Democratic Party. Such was the power of his personal influence in and out of the State of California that it was thought necessary that he should be put out of the way. It was said, and generally believed, that the pro-slavery leaders in California determined by lot which of their number should challenge BRODERICK to fight a duel. The lot fell upon TERRY, who was an accomplished duellist and an excellent shot, while BRODERICK was wholly unversed in the art of fighting with deadly weapons. TERRY forced a quarrel upon BRODERICK; a challenge was passed, and the young Senator went out to what seemed to be his certain death, mistakenly believing that it was his duty as a man of honor to put his ignorance and inexperience as a marksman against the experience and deliberate coolness of his antagonist. BRODERICK was killed, apparently with deliberation and prearrangement. He lingered for a few hours, and his last words were said to be, "They have killed me for opposing slavery." In California BRODERICK was regarded as a martyr to the cause of human liberty; and TERRY, who escaped the penalty due his crime, by a legal trick, was looked upon as a mere vulgar murderer who had availed himself of the complications of "the code" to rid the country of a political opponent.

After many years, the people of California have embraced their first opportunity to reaffix upon TERRY the stigma which he earned in the murderous duel of 1859. TERRY, who was a Judge of the State Supreme Court, resigned his position on the Bench when he fought the duel. Subsequently he remained in retirement, and when the first mutterings of the civil war were heard he took flight into the Confederacy, and played an insignificant part in the rebel army. Returning to California after the war, he naturally cast in his lot with the reorganized Democratic Party, and was a member of the so-called New Constitution Party a year ago. With a fatuousness which is truly characteristic of Democratic management everywhere, this blood-stained, unrepenting ex-rebel was nominated as one of the Hancock Electors. Voters who desired the success of the Democratic ticket refused to allow his name on their ballots. He was vigorously and effectively "scratched" by members of a party who, whatever might have been their preferences, so far as the party was concerned, would not give a particle of honor to the slayer of BRODERICK. The result is that while the highest on the list of Democratic Electors has a majority of 143, TERRY is defeated, and the highest on the Republican Electoral ticket—HENRY EDEMISTON—has 507 more votes than TERRY, and is consequently elected.

It is not an unprecedented thing that the Electoral vote of a State should be divided. In 1805, Maryland gave nine of her eleven Electoral votes for THOMAS JEFFERSON and two votes for C. C. PINCKNEY. New-York, in 1809, cast thirteen Electoral votes for JAMES MADISON and six for GEORGE CLINTON; and in the same election the votes of Maryland and North Carolina were unequally divided. In 1813, when MADISON was re-elected, the Electoral vote of Maryland was again divided, six of her eleven votes being cast for MADISON and the remainder given to DE WITT CLINTON. When JAMES MONROE was a second time elected President, in 1821, New-Hampshire cast one of her eight votes for JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, the rest being thrown for MONROE. More complicated divisions of the Electoral votes of States occurred at the election of JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, in 1825, when the choice was devolved upon the House of Representatives; and in 1829, when ANDREW JACKSON was elected for the first time, and when Maine, New-York, and Maryland divided their Electoral votes between the two candidates. But the result in California is solely due to the unpopularity of the candidate for Elector, rather than to the choice of the people, so far as the Presidential candidate is concerned. Under the laws of some States, TERRY would be forever debarred from holding any office in the gift of the citizens. But the California Bourbons, arrogantly disregarding the sentiment of the people, forced this man upon their ticket. The result is a rebuke which is most signal and emphatic. If it had happened that the Democratic candidate for President had been defeated by reason of this folly, it might have been said that the will of the people had been thwarted by reason of the perversity of the political managers.

COTTON TRADE OF THE PAST YEAR.

The annual review of the cotton trade issued by ELLISON & Co., of Liverpool, for the twelvemonth ending Sept. 30 is a document looked for with much interest by those concerned in the production, traffic, and consumption of that staple. That for the last trade year has just come to hand. It refers at the outset to the remarkable revival in the cotton manufactures of Great Britain from the depression of the previous year, and attributes its rapidity to the trade policy of the country which opens to it such wide markets. In the discussion of prices it shows that the average for middling upland was 6 31-32d., against 6 8-32d. in the preceding year and 6 5-16d. in 1877-8. The statistics of imports exhibit a considerable increase for Great Britain, and for Europe generally. The number of bales for all Europe was 5,636,000 of an average weight of 434.2 pounds, against 5,064,000 of 427.2 pounds in the previous year, and 5,191,000 of 432.5 pounds in 1877-8. The increase in Great Britain was from 2,602,000 bales of 436 pounds in 1878-9, to 3,018,000 of 444 pounds, the amount in 1877-8 having been 2,787,000 bales of 436 pounds each. The number of bales delivered on the Continent was 2,618,000, of an average weight of 433 pounds, against 2,452,000 bales of 418 pounds the year previous and 2,404,000 of 438 pounds in 1877-8. The average weekly delivery in Great Britain was 58,038 bales, against 50,026 the previous year and 53,607 two years before; for the Continent, the figures are, respectively, for the three years reckoning back, 50,344, 47,952, and 46,236 bales. The entire amount imported into Europe is unprecedented, at least in recent years.

A still more interesting phase of the subject for us is to be found in the figures relating to the sources of supply. Of the 8,018,000 bales imported by Great Britain, 2,294,000 came from this country, 270,000 from the East Indies, 119,000 from Brazil, 278,000 from Egypt, and 62,000 from other sources. There was a general increase of the supply from all quarters over that of the previous year, and the figures for other than American sources are larger, though to a less extent, than those of 1877-8. But the imports from this country show a decided increase, being 2,294,000 bales, against 2,094,000 the preceding year and 2,074,000 in 1877-8; and at no previous time in 10 years had they reached 3,000,000 bales. Of the total imports to the Continent of 2,618,000 bales, the largest for the 10 years which are included in the comparison, 1,421,000 came from this country, 919,000 from the East Indies, 48,000 from Brazil, 174,000 from Egypt, and 61,000 from other sources. The statistics show a general increase in the supply from the East Indies and Egypt, and a diminution from Brazil and the sources classified as sundry. The amount taken from this country was not so large as that of the previous year—1,570,000—but was greater than for any other twelvemonth in the series. Of the 5,636,000 bales imported by all Europe, 3,715,000 were supplied by this country, as compared with 3,664,000 the previous year and 3,476,000 in 1877-8. The increase has been irregular, but continuous, during the decade. The total import into Europe was 945,000 bales greater than for the previous year, and only 197,000 bales remained in stock at the close of the season.

The reports regarding the cotton manufactures of the different countries of Europe show a general improvement except in Russia and Austria. The statistics of consumption show that the amount of the material used during the year in Great Britain was 2,850,000 bales of 400 pounds each, or a weekly average of 63,810. The year previous the total was 2,848,000 bales, and the weekly average 54,153, and in 1877-8 the total was 3,038,000, and the weekly average 58,423. The figures for the past year are considerably in excess of those of any other year included in the tables. About 200,000 new spindles have been brought into operation, making the total number in the Kingdom 39,750,000. The consumption on the Continent amounted to 2,795,000 bales of 400 pounds each, or a weekly average of 51,905. For the preceding year the total was 2,596,000 bales, and the weekly average 49,938; and for 1877-8, total 2,609,000, weekly average, 48,260.

These figures show a very promising condition of the cotton trade, and Messrs. ELLISON & Co. calculate upon a further increase of consumption for both Great Britain and the Continent in the year 1880-81. They estimate the demand of Great Britain at 65,000 to 66,000 bales of 400 pounds each per week, and that of the Continent at 53,000 to 54,000, or say 119,000 for all Europe, against 116,000 last year, or a total of 6,188,000 bales. The question of chief interest is where this is to come from and how much of it is to be drawn from the United States. The probable American crop is placed at five and three-quarter millions. The supply to be expected from India is put at 1,082,000 bales of 400 pounds; from Egypt, 670,000; from Brazil, 90,000; from Peru, the West Indies, &c., 43,000, and from Turkey, &c., 21,000. Adding these together, we have 1,856,000 bales expected from other than American sources, which deducted from the 6,188,000 required leaves 4,332,000 bales of 400 pounds as the amount likely to be wanted from America. American cotton is put up in bales of 450 pounds, and reduced to these, the European requirement is 3,860,000 bales. Last season the deliveries to American spinners, the export to Canada, &c., in other words, the supply of American cotton not taken by Europe, was 1,851,984 bales, against 1,614,127 the previous year. The demand of this season is estimated at 1,950,000 bales, a very moderate allowance for increase. This, with the European requirement, makes 5,800,000 bales of 450 pounds, the amount wanted from this year's crop, the actual figures of 1879-80 being 5,757,000. Of course, there are elements of uncertainty which cannot be taken into account in these estimates and calculations, but they are based on the best knowledge and judgment attainable.

THE UNIVERSAL ANSWER.

Prof. ZOLLNER, the learned German, who has discovered to his own satisfaction that the performances of the medium SLADE are proofs of the existence of the fourth dimension of space, has builded much better than he knew. He has decided that inasmuch as he cannot explain the marvels which he witnessed in SLADE's presence by any hypothesis resting upon known natural laws, they must inevitably be the work of intelligent but invisible beings dwelling in the fourth dimension of space. This postulate not only fully explains all the so-called phenomena of Spiritualism, but it explains a great deal more. It cannot be confined to the operations of SLADE and HOME, but it must be a universal application. Whatever we find to be inexplicable in accordance with the accepted laws of science we must assume to be the work of the mysterious inhabitants of the fourth dimension. Thus Prof. ZOLLNER has really discovered the key to the universe, and by its help we can explain everything that has hitherto been mysterious, no matter what it may be.

Earthquakes are, as all modern students of science know, a complete puzzle to scientific persons. It was once thought that they were caused by the sudden expansion of steam or gases generated by the subterranean contact of water with the intensely heated interior of the earth. We now know, on the authority of science, that the old belief that the interior of the earth is hot is a fallacy. The earth, instead of being a globe of liquid fire inclosed by a thin crust, is solid all the way through, and its interior is colder than its surface. This explodes the theory that earthquakes are produced by steam or gases generated with the aid of intense heat in the bowels of the earth. Neither are they caused, as early philosophers maintained, by the irregular heaving of the sea of melted rocks in the centre of the earth, for it has been proved that no such sea exists. What, then, is the true cause of earthquakes? To this question science returns no answer. The scientific person can no more explain an earthquake than he can explain the cleverest of SLADE's professional miracles. The one is as inexplicable as the other, unless we apply to both the hypothesis that they are the work of the mysterious fourth-dimensional imps. It is evident that if this explanation is the true explanation of Spiritualistic wonders it must be also the true explanation of earthquakes. If Prof. ZOLLNER says: "I cannot tell how SLADE obtains writing on a slate, and, therefore, I assume that the writing is done by fourth-dimensional beings." He must, also, if he wants to be a consistent philosopher, say: "I cannot tell how earthquakes are produced, and I must, therefore, assume that they are the work of fourth-dimensional beings." These latter remarkable imps are as necessary to explain earthquakes as they are to explain the furniture-quakes of SLADE. Thus the learned ZOLLNER, while he merely sought to find the answer to SLADE's Spiritualistic conundrums, has unwittingly hit upon the grand law which explains all the mysteries of the universe.

To beings of the fourth dimension must be attributed those strange phenomena known as "magnetic storms." Every little while the magnetic currents of the earth get into an inextricable tangle, and until they are straightened out again the telegraph is entirely useless. No man knows what causes a magnetic storm, and there has never been any hypothesis proposed which pretends to explain the mystery. Here what we may term the Zollner law, that everything that is inexplicable is the work of the beings of the fourth dimension, comes in and makes the matter perfectly clear. These beings occasionally engage in playing cat's cradle, using the magnetic currents instead of strings. The result is the intricate entanglement of currents called a "magnetic storm," and this "magnetic storm" lasts until the game of fourth-dimensional cat's cradle is finished.

Hundreds of lesser mysteries can be explained with like facility. Why does a woman always button her left shoe before she buttons the right one? Why does a piece of bread and butter, when dropped on the floor, fall, in nine cases out of ten, with its buttered side underneath? Why is it that no Democratic General Committee can conduct a campaign with any intelligence or decency? In all these cases the answers which scientific men have vainly sought are one and the same. The fourth-dimensional imps exercise an influence which is irresistibly felt by women, by bread and butter, and by Democratic General Committees. Indeed, Prof. ZOLLNER's book is only another illustration of what can be done by these mischievous beings, who have unquestionably led him to neglect astronomy and to devote himself to the investigation of SLADE instead of the study of the starry heavens.

In considering the question of a fund for ex-Presidents, it may be interesting to study the duration of life of those who have enjoyed the greatest distinction our people can confer. Of the 19 Presidents, excluding, of course, Gen. GRANT and Mr. HAYES, the one who attained the greatest age was JOHN ADAMS, who lived to be 91. Assuming the Presidential chair in 1797, succeeded by JEFFERSON in 1801, he lived on for a quarter of a century. The next in number of years was THOMAS JEFFERSON, who, dying a year after JOHN ADAMS, attained the age of 83. JOHN QUINCY ADAMS is third, having lived 81 years. The fourth in age was VAN BUREN, who, born in 1782, died in 1862, aged 80. Taking the average lives of the Presidents, it is found to be a little less than 72 years. At what age do those men who are made Presidents assume their high office? The oldest man who was made President was HARRISON, who was 68 when inaugurated. The youngest was Gen. GRANT, who was made President when he was 47. FRANKLIN PIERCE was President in his forty-ninth year, and was remembered as the "boy President." The average age at which a man is made President is 57. Now, taking 72 as the duration of life of Presidents, and 57 as the age of a President when inaugurated, and adding to this his four years of office, which makes him 61 when he gives up his position, should a fund be established, re-election of the same person not entering into the calculation, the oldest ex-President might be the recipient of the interest from the fund during a period of 11 years.

What Messrs. L. PRANG & Co. did last Spring in New-York, in offering a prize competition for Christmas card designs, has been repeated with equal success in London. At first the English press were rather inclined to scoff at the idea of their artists entering the lists, but the London publishers, like the New-York ones, having offered good round sums for the best pictures, it seems that many distinguished English artists were very glad to send in their works. Both the Saturday Review and the Spectator have devoted a great deal of space to discussions in regard to the comparative merits of the pictures and the awards. The judges in London were Sir COUTTS LINDSAY, Mr. H. S. MARKS, R. A., and Mr. G. H. BOUGHTON, A. R. A. What is rather amusing about these comments is the entire change of tone in regard to the nature of the exhibition. At first treated as a trivial matter, it has been taken up in quite a serious light. Now, what should prevent the best influences of art from being directed toward the designing and printing of a Christmas card? As a proper esthetic taste should be developed not as much among single individuals as among the masses, the very best method of inculcating this feeling is to turn out in quantity, at a reasonable price, good pictures, which all the world can buy. This is exactly what our own American publishers have done, and their English confreres, seeing how excellent was the idea, have followed it. Messrs. PRANG & Co. propose another competition, under almost precisely the same conditions, only allowing a longer time for the preparation. As the first exhibition of pictures was of rather a tentative character, the designs being so much crowded that criticism was rendered difficult, it is to be hoped that better accommodation will be afforded for the works of competing artists.

Frequent as Nihilist executions have been during the last few years, the victims are happily of a very different order from those of the days of NICHOLAS. The two political incendiaries who have just been put to death by the Czar are little loss to their country; but many men still living can remember a bleak December morning in St. Petersburg when a dozen of the most brilliant men in Russia were led out to die upon one gallows, including PESTEL, the composer of the famous waltz, and RYLEJEFF, one of the leading native poets of his time. The latter's end was marked by a very striking episode. He had insisted on dying before his friend PESTEL, in order to show the latter how calmly he could meet his fate; but the rope broke, and he came to the ground still alive. An influential friend of his, who was present, implored the officer in command to delay the execution till he had made one more appeal for mercy, and hurried to the Palace. "Did he say anything when he fell?" asked the Czar. The suppliant hesitated, but the subaltern who attended him, an enemy of RYLEJEFF, replied at once, "He said, your Majesty, that in Russia they cannot even hang a man properly." "Go back, then," roared NICHOLAS, "and show him that they can!"

The summary of the figures for the operations of the Post Office Department during the last fiscal year, given in our Washington dispatches some days ago, are worthy of more particular notice and of some comparisons. The year's receipts, $36,315,479, were the largest ever known, being about three and a third millions in advance of 1878-9, and falling only $124,650 below the expenditures of that year. The deficit for 1878-9 was $3,407,918, which was less than in any prior year since 1856; in 1879-80, it was $2,726,941. Looking over the parallelled columns giving revenue and expenditures since 1856, their growth is seen to have been moderate and tolerably well balanced until about 1866, in which the expenditures first reached ten millions. In 1858, revenue had further increased only a single million, while expenditures had added more than five millions; in 1860, the former fell but a little, while the latter took on nearly three and a half millions more; in 1861 and 1862, expenditures fell back five or six millions, while receipts declined less than a quarter million, the unprofitable section of the country having then a postal business on its own account. In 1863, the receipts passed ten millions for the first time, and since, with the exception of 1866 and 1877, every year has had an increase of revenues over the one next preceding. Expenditures have increased in almost every year since 1863, except that 1870 declined a little from 1875, and now 1880 has declined from 1879. Looking back 20 years, the revenues have gone from $8,518,000 in 1860 to $19,775,000 in 1870 and $36,315,000 in 1880. The deficit, which was $4,897,567 in 1878, came down in 1879 to $3,407,918, and to $2,726,941 last year; this change, which in 1879 was produced by both a decrease in expenditures and an increase of receipts, was in 1880 due to a greater increase in the latter than in the former. It is a progress which justifies the expectation that the deficit may disappear entirely before the close of the century. With the decline in postal rates has come a marvelous increase in speed and accuracy in the service, and it is superfluous to say that the postal business was never before in so efficient and satisfactory a condition. The times when letters were rare visitors, brought by stage coach over journeys of weeks, and at rates which had been reduced when they were three to five times the present, seem far off now, and yet one need not be old in order to remember them. The development of the postal service is one of the many marks which tell how the country is filling up, and it is an encouraging fact that the standard of average intelligence increases with population pretty closely. Of this fact there is an evidence at hand: the five States at the head in population—New-York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and Massachusetts—same less than a half-million short of contributing one-half of the postal revenues last year. These five are in the front rank in every respect; their postal business paid a large surplus, and it is scarcely necessary to add that they are Republican in politics.

WADE HAMPTON's indiscreet habit of talking seems to be catching. Gen. BUTLER, his colleague in the Senate, who has heretofore been regarded as a man of some prudence, is the latest sufferer from the disease. He has been talking about the future policy of the Republicans, about the Republican representation in Congress and the character of Republican leaders, and he has been talking very foolishly. As to the next Congress, he says: "I am not sure the Radicals will have a majority. I think we shall retain control of the Senate by a small majority, and the Radical clerks of the lower house have yet as some valuable lessons in the preparation of the lists of members preparatory to an organization of the House, and it is by no means certain that we shall lose it." If this kind of talk means anything at all, it means that the Democratic minority in the next Congress, true to its past record, will, through its serviceable tool, Clerk ADAMS, make one last expiring effort to retain control of the legislative power which it sees so rapidly slipping from its grasp. Under the law, the present Clerk, who is one of the most bigoted and bitter of Democratic partisans, will have power to make up the roll of the incoming House, and upon him will devolve the duty of calling it to order. The tricky and disreputable manner in which Mr. ADAMS exercised this power two years ago leaves no doubt that he would, if the Republican majority were smaller, be quite equal to the task of voting it out by arbitrary decisions in trumped-up cases of contest, thereby giving the organization to his own party friends. Mr. Clerk ADAMS is particularly desperate now, because he is so soon to lose his fat place; but all his desperation and ingenuity will not be sufficient to place a majority of Democratic names upon the first roll of the new House. The Republicans are now too strong to be trifled with as they were in the Belford-Pierson contest of 1878. They have a clear working majority in the next national assembly, and despite the tricks of ADAMS or the vaporings of Mr. BUTLER, they will certainly organize and control it. A person who holds a seat in the United States Senate, even though that seat was obtained by violence and fraud, ought to be very much above suggesting a conspiracy to deprive a legislative majority of its just rights.

GENERAL NOTES.

The Democratic majority in Georgia on the candidates for Representatives in Congress is 44,612.

All the counties but two in Maine increased their relative Republican vote at the Presidential election over September.

The Quebec Mercury says that the Princess Louise is expected to leave England, on her return to Canada, in about three weeks.

The new Senate of New-Hampshire of 24 members contains not one lawyer. The fact may be regretted before the end of the first session.

Congressman Henry Van Aernam, of the Thirty-third District, is reported to be seriously ill at his home in Franklinville, Cattaraugus County.

The Republican plurality in Pennsylvania on the vote for Representatives in Congress is 36,209. Gen. Garfield's majority in the State was 972 more than this.

The Cincinnati Commercial expresses the opinion that the small rascals in the forgery conspiracy are of no consequence; the hunt should now be for the big rogues.

The Washington Post has been examining the official figures that are coming slowly in, and, in a contemplative mood inquires, In what State did Hancock's Second Corps vote?

The State Board of Canvassers will meet in Albany to-day to canvass the votes cast at the election on the 2d inst., if the returns have been sent in from the several counties.

The Hon. C. C. Conger, who was elected to the Legislature of California as "a Working Man," says that he has voted for every Republican candidate for President since 1860, and that he intends to vote for a Republican for United States Senator.

The Harrisonburg (Va.) Register recommends Major S. M. Yost for Postmaster-General in President Garfield's Cabinet. He is the editor of the Staunton Valley Virginian, which the Register describes as the ablest Republican paper in the Southern States.

The Louisville Courier-Journal at this late day confesses that from the first it suspected the Morey letter, and says: "It turns out to be the offspring of a very base conspiracy, and we hope the authors thereof, no matter who they may be, will be brought to the fullest exposure."

The Chicago Times, disgusted at the statement by Barnum and his co-conspirators, closes a leading article with these emphatic words: "The 'explanation' offered by these gentry has not helped their case in the least, but hurt it, if it were not past hurting. It is too thin. It is too plainly a lame and impotent effort of rascality unmasked to hide its shame."

An amendment to the Constitution of Vermont is proposed by which the opinions of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the State on important questions of law may be required by the Governor, the Senate, or the House of Representatives, when such questions of law are necessary to be determined by the authority or body making the inquiry in the exercise of Executive or Legislative functions.

AMUSEMENTS.

"MEFISTOFELE" IN BOSTON.

BOSTON, Nov. 16.—Boito's opera of "Mefistofele," the most recent of successful operas, was produced at the Globe Theatre in this city to-night for the first time in America. The words were sung in English. The house was crowded in every part, and the performance was received with great favor. Mme. Marie Rôse sustained the leading female role, Margherita, at first, and afterward Helen of Troy, and added fresh laurels to those she has already gained here in "Aida" and "Carmen." The critics and musical connoisseurs of Boston were present in full force, and the general verdict was that the work will grow in popular favor as it becomes better known and its composer's ideas are more fully sustained. The music on the part of Margherita is well adapted to the voice of Mme. Rôse, and she appeared to the best advantage. Mr. Conly was an impressive Mefistofele and Signor Perugini a satisfactory Faust. Mr. Behrens conducted the performance, and the opera was well mounted.

GENERAL MENTION.

Dr. James L. Farley will give his first recital of "Hamlet" at Chickering Hall this evening.

The latest novelty in the programme of the San Francisco Minstrels is a brief and timely burlesque called "Sarah Heart-Burn"—a title that carries its own weighty moral.

Mr. Joseph Jefferson may be seen throughout the present week at the Grand Opera-House in "Rip Van Winkle." A matinée performance of this popular play is announced for to-day.

Miss Clara Morris's second matinée performance drew another very large audience to the Park Theatre yesterday afternoon. Miss Morris performed, as usual, in "Article 47." To-morrow afternoon she will appear again at the same theatre.

During the approaching engagement of the Comley-Barton Company at the Bijou Opera-house matinée performances will begin at noon. The company will per AURORA, N. Y., Nov. 16, 1880.

DEAR SIR: The plan for raising a Presidential pension fund meets my cordial approval, and I crave the privilege of being one of the early subscribers to the extent of $150, for which amount I will honor your draft on presentation. I have no doubt that patriotic Americans all over the land will liberally and promptly respond to the plan. Yours very truly, HENRY MORGAN.

GEORGE JONES, Esq.

YONKERS, Nov. 16, 1880.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find what is often more than my day's earnings, toward THE TIMES fund for ex-Presidents. Your plan, in my opinion, is most wise and far-sighted. This fund should come as a present, the spontaneous offering of a grateful and patriotic people out of their own pockets, and not as a pension by an act of Congress, which may some day provoke political wrangle to the dishonor of the fund. Yours, respectfully, S. S. G.

GEORGE JONES, Esq.

PRESS COMMENTS.

From the Philadelphia North American.

The American who is enlightening the inquiring foreigner upon the political administration of his Government is apt to dwell with some emphasis, and not without a sense of pride, upon the fact that the President at the expiration of his term is divested of all official authority, and becomes a private citizen again, returns, Cincinnatus-like, to the business from which he was taken. This is the theory, but as a matter of fact it is more plausible than practical. There seems to be no reason why an ex-President should not—provided he has earned by his way after the four years are over, just as though nothing had happened, and if our Presidents were taken from private life this would be perfectly feasible. But in our times it is virtually impossible, except in extraordinary circumstances, for any man to be nominated to the Presidency who does not made politics his profession and his means of livelihood. Now, when a man becomes President, his political career is closed. It is, of course, competent for him to serve again in the House of Representatives or Senate, or to fill any other of the innumerable offices which combine profit with dignity; but though he may be willing to do so, it is not very likely that he will be given a chance. Both his former political colleagues and the public are apt to think that he has had his share, and if he is not possessed of an independence, his position is certainly an embarrassing one. For it stands to reason that if the American people have no concern in his private affairs. Theoretically he is no more than any other citizen, but that he should have a semi-public character is, by the nature of things, unavoidable, and it would be a strange thing if they were not anxious for the honor of the Nation. That some provision should be made against such a contingency is a proposition from which few people will dissent, but we doubt if the appeals of the gentlemen who want to raise a relief fund by private subscription will meet with universal response. It will be the general opinion that if it is right that an ex-President should be pensioned, the granting of such a pension should be a national act. The question is one for the Legislature of Congress, and what to do with him, and for him, constantly agitates the public mind. As a mark of national gratitude the feeling is natural and every way commendable.

From the Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

On the whole we are inclined to think the plan a good one; and with the $50,000 guaranteed and $10,000 which THE TIMES has received since its publication of the scheme, its success would seem to be practically assured. It will be a handsome and graceful way of showing the country's appreciation of Gen. Grant's great services, and in years to come will furnish his successors in the Presidential office not undesirable provision against poverty. Res angusta domi.

From the Canton (Ohio) Repository.

This fund is worthy the generosity and characteristic of the ingenuity of the American people, and should receive popular support. The smallest subscriptions are welcomed, from nickels to thousands, and the Repository, feeling a genuine interest in the scheme and believing that some of its readers feel likewise, will forward any subscriptions which may be left at or sent to this office.

GEN. SCHOFIELD TO BE REMOVED.

A COVERT ATTEMPT TO AID HANCOCK'S CANVASS THE CAUSE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Gen. Schofield is to be removed from his position as commandant at West Point and transferred elsewhere. His report upon the Whittaker case is the cause. It is said that Gen. Schofield wrote this report before the October election with a view of helping Gen. Hancock's canvass, and when he found it was not printed he desired to recall it.

GEN. GARFIELD'S VISITORS.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 16.—Joseph Medill, editor of the Chicago Tribune, was among Gen. Garfield's visitors to-day.

NEWBURG, N. Y., Nov. 16.—The Sheriff's jury here to-day gave judgment for $5,000 to Miss Sarah E. Brooks, of Fort Montgomery, this county, against Richard Busselle, whom she charged with seduction under promise of marriage. Busselle cannot be found. The plaintiff thinks he is in Canada.

HONORS TO MR. M. W. COOPER

DINED AND TOASTED AT THE MERCHANTS' CLUB.

A WELL-MERITED RECOGNITION OF EFFICIENT SERVICE—THE DINNER AND THEIR GUESTS—SPEECH BY MR. COOPER—THE DUTY OF BUSINESS MEN IN POLITICS.

The Merchants' Club last night entertained Mr. M. W. Cooper at a dinner in the club-rooms in Leonard-street, "in recognition of his valuable services in the recent political campaign." During the canvass Mr. Cooper displayed wonderful interest and activity in arousing the business men to the importance of insuring success to the Republican ticket, and his inspiring presence and words did wonders in convincing indifferent and careless gentlemen who would not otherwise have been concerned about the result of the election. In the rooms of the Merchants' Club was spread a table for about 75 guests. It was arranged with artistic taste, and was decorated with a profusion of flowers and specimens of the pastry cook's skill. At this victory feast there were present beside Mr. Cooper, Gen. Chester A. Arthur, Vice-President-elect of the United States, and Gen. Stewart L. Woodford. Mr. W. L. Strong, of W. L. Strong & Co., presided. Among the others present were C. N. Bliss, G. W. Hall, H. S. Scudder, W. B. Kendall, John Sloane, C. W. Griswold, F. R. Taylor, S. Milliken, J. Ty Leavitt, J. Morgan Slade, A. T. Suthran, J. Gibbs, J. H. Reed, Francis Baker, F. M. Bacon, E. M. Townsend, T. J. Davis, N. Sullivan, Jacob Wendell, E. E. Poor, N. Robert, J. Byers, E. W. Holbrook, E. S. Auchincloss, J. S. Boardman, J. W. Cochran, W. Post, A. W. Bates, G. P. Slade, J. M. Deane, J. F. B. Mitchell, H. P. Smith, A. G. Paine, Norman Peck, I. J. Martin, J. H. Peck, J. F. Plummer, D. P. W. McMullen, Bryce Gray, E. J. Tailer, Jr., E. R. Haines, S. R. Lesher, Richard Butler, R. W. Cutter, W. Langdon, J. Catlin, Jr., W. C. Browning, Joseph H. Brown, W. A. Paton, L. W. Winchester, C. L. Tiffany, W. L. Pomeroy, Gardner L. Colby, T. L. Hill, William Turnbull, O. Harriman, J. W. Goddard, W. H. Lee, G. H. Shreve, J. U. Fraley, W. D. Farwell, T. Shotwell, O. K. Eldridge, and Ernest Mitchell.

After the discussion of an elaborate menu, which was remarkable for the excellence and variety of wines which it enumerated, and when the coffee and cigars were upon the table, the Chairman, Mr. Strong, rapped for order. In a brief and clever speech he expressed the sentiments of the members of the club toward Mr. Cooper, their honored guest, alluding to his valuable services for Garfield and Arthur in the campaign just closed, and finished by proposing his health. All the members rose, with a cheer, to drink this toast. When they were again seated Mr. Cooper rose and responded as follows:

Mr. CHAIRMAN, MERCHANTS, FRIENDS: I cannot find words to convey to you my grateful feelings for the honor you have conferred upon me. When I look upon this assemblage of the representative merchants of this great City of New-York gathered together here, I have not the vanity to suppose for a moment that this magnificent expression is merely a personal one. You have interpreted, on occasion like this, something more than individuality—something broader and deeper than personality. Following so closely upon the late heated canvass for the election of our Nation's rulers for the next four years, I infer your congratulations extend to your friend, Chester A. Arthur, surroundings and embrace in your sympathies every citizen in this broad land, for, fortunately, our success has never threatened to jeopardize the welfare of even the humblest citizen, and those who acted in opposition never felt that their defeat would find them any the poorer, unless perhaps, they had put up their money on the result injudiciously. The part I took in the campaign now happily ended was no more than I felt in duty bound to do, as a citizen, in part payment for the distinguished honors I owe under our noble form of free government, and to insure its continuance—even then I should have accomplished but very little but for your encouragement and support. Fellow-merchants, in our experience of more than a quarter of a century in your midst, I have never found you wanting in any crisis requiring patriotic effort, and to you our Government has turned, in the past, on many occasions for succor, and never turned in vain, and it has been ever and when your work is done you return to your own affairs, asking for no recompense beyond a good, pure, and economical administration of the laws from those you helped to place in power, and to have a good name at home, and a just fame everywhere. I am proud to be reckoned as one among your number. When your committee invited me to this banquet I was overcome with emotion, and could not realize that I had been selected from among your ranks to receive this high honor, and I felt then, as I do now, that if each of you had been thus rewarded for services performed we should be feasting here for the next 100 days. We have every reason to be proud of the candidates we have chosen for our rulers—Gen. Garfield, a man of bright intellect, broad views, and large experience in statesmanship, honest, unselfish, and without personal ambition, and our own fellow-citizen, Gen. Arthur, who, in all the positions of public trust he has been called upon to fill for the past 20 years, has never, but always discharged them all with great honor to the country and credit to himself—behold him! he brings to his new duties a wise head, a pure heart, and an incorruptible nature, and I predict, Gen. Garfield and Arthur at the head of the Government of the United States, one of the wisest and best Administrations that this Nation has ever seen, and when their term expires by limitation this Nation will be glad to renew their lease for another term with authorities far beyond that given the first President in this month, and I say that, and let us all unite to strengthen their arms, and bear up their hands in all their laudable undertakings, discouraging unjust criticism on unaccomplished facts, leaving their work to speak for them. The coming Administration will be fearless to act, and free to carry out reform in its highest sense, independent of political dictation. The late election has shown them there is somebody looking on besides politicians; it will not be a stand-off Administration, led by public opinion, but rather will be a creator of public opinion, taking the lead in all question which promise to yield the greatest benefits to the greatest number. And now, my friends, I cannot sit down without again returning my heartfelt thanks, and to thank you for all coming time that you will be held in my inmost soul with a remembrance and a fondness new friends can never claim.

Mr. Cooper's speech was frequently interrupted by applause, and at its conclusion he was again heartily cheered. In response to the next toast, and after loud calls for Gen. Arthur, that gentleman rose amid a storm of cheers. His speech was an exceedingly felicitous one, and it was frequently broken by the applause of his hearers. E. M. Townsend, President of the Merchants' Club, responded. Gen. Arthur, and speeches were also made by Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, C. N. Bliss, N. Sullivan, and Richard Butler. J. L. Hill, who has also acted with the Democratic Party even in the recent election, said that he had cast his lot with the Republicans, and proposed to become a member of the party of brains and intelligence—a party that had shown capacity to plan and the ability to win victories.

A WEALTHY MAN'S SUDDEN DEATH.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16.—Henry Morrell, a wealthy Californian, 70 years old, was found dead in bed in the St. Cloud Hotel this morning. He retired in his usual health last night, and not appearing this morning the door of his room was forced, and he was discovered dead in bed. Papers found among his effects show that he has a brother living in Chicago, another in Saginaw, Mich., and relatives in Burlington, Vt. A list of registered bonds, footing up considerably over $100,000, and other valuables were also found.

A CALIFORNIA TOWN IN FLAMES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 16.—A dispatch from Bodie says that a fire at Mammoth City on Sunday broke out about 10:30 o'clock in the morning in the roof of George W. Bowen's store and rapidly communicated to the adjoining building, and was only checked after it had burned all the upper portion of the town above the Herald office. The lower part of the town, including all the buildings and the mill of the Mammoth Mining Company, was saved. Much distress has been caused, as 50 families have burned out, but the citizens are doing all they can to alleviate the suffering. Mammoth City is 80 miles distant from Bodie, the nearest telegraph point, and communication accordingly is slow and difficult. The losses are thought to aggregate $45,000. The amount of insurance is unknown. The fire is believed to have been accidental.

SPANISH AND ITALIAN COINS.

CONCLUSION OF THE ANTHON SALE—INTERESTING FEATURES OF IT.

The auction sale of the second part of Prof. Charles E. Anthon's numismatic cabinet, which was begun on Monday, was concluded yesterday afternoon, at Bangs & Co's. The aggregate prices for both days amounted in round numbers to $8,000, an average of about $1 for each lot. The attendance was small yesterday, the purchasers consisting almost exclusively of collectors and dealers in curiosities. The prices were in no cases excessive, and in some instances the articles were knocked down at less than their value as relics. Indeed, some of the silver pieces sold for sums hardly equivalent to their bullion value. Belgian, Swiss, Spanish, Italian, and Portuguese coins were sold yesterday. A superb Belgian coin (1619) brought $15 25. Its reverse side shows a crowned armorial shield supported by two lions. From the shield hangs a fire-steel, and from this a fleece. The obverse side represents the Archduke Albert and Elizabeth of Spain, he in armor, she in state dress, and both in Spanish ruffs. A gilt brass medal on the foundation of the church of the Abbey of St. Peter on the Blandynsberg, near Ghent (1659,) brought $1. A copper coin bearing the impress of the Emperor Joseph II. (1781) sold for 30 cents. A five-franc piece of the time of Leopold II. (1865) sold for $1 05, and a one-franc piece of the same date for 50 cents. Centimes of 1825, 1826, and 1833 went for one cent each. A bronze Masonic medal (1885) commemorative of the marriage of Prince Frederic of the Netherlands, a Grand Master of the order, sold for $1 90. The obverse side bears legends in quadrate cipher, with a full-length standing figure of Lucinia. The reverse bears the radiant triangle. Only 400 were struck off. A silver medal weighing two and three-eighth ounces, given as a Masonic recompense to Baron de Stassart, brought $5 10. A Swiss medal dollar commemorative of the foundation of the Swiss Confederation brought $15. On the obverse side are the words, "William Tell of Uri, Stauffacher of Schwytz, Arnold of Unterwalden. Beginning of the League, A. D. 1308." These three, armed, are grasping right hands. The reverse shows the shields of the 13 Cantons existing in 1513, the rank of each being denoted by the number beneath. In an inner circle are the shields of seven associated States. A silver medal on the victory at Morea (1686) over Charles the Bald sold for $2 50. This medal bears the inscription, in German, "Ut Confederatas, God lights us to victory." On it is the figure of a knight in armor kneeling, holding a sword and standard. On the reverse side is an obelisk surrounded by shields. A broad double dollar brought $8 50. A Spanish double ducat of the time of Ferdinand and Isabella, coined at Toledo, sold for $15. A ducat of the same dynasty struck at Burgos was sold for $14.

There was quite a spirited contest for the possession of a half-dollar of the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella. The bidding began at $1, and ended at $5 50. The coin is supposed to have been minted at Seville. It is very rare. Two pieces of the time of Philip II. caused quite a competition. One was a dollar (1590) and the other a bronze medal, (1598.) The dollar sold for $12 50 and the medal for $20. The dollar is one of the earliest that was coined by Spain, and the medal is held to be one of the choicest gems in the collection. It is supposed to be the last medal made before the King's death. A real of Barcelona (1696) sold for $2 25. A silver medal to commemorate the submission of Madrid to Charles III. the Pretender, afterward the Emperor Charles VI., sold for $2. The face of the coin shows the bust of Charles in a long wig and clad in armor. A doubloon of Philip V. (1743,) containing gold of an intrinsic value of $16, sold for $18. An Italian coin of King Theodoric's time, bearing the head of the Byzantine Emperor Justin and the monogram of Theodoric, sold for $3 50. This was the highest price paid for any of the pieces belonging to the Astrogothic reign in Italy. Coins of the Kingdom of Italy since 1861 sold for a very small advance on their nation rate. The piece which brought the highest price, and for the possession of which there was a spirited contest, was a large heavy medal of Mahmoud II., described in Rollin's Ancient History as Constantius. It was started at $10, and finally went for $35 25 to a Boston bidder. It belongs to the reign of Mohammed II., and is one of the earliest coins bearing the Arabic numerals. On the face is a turbaned head of Mohammed II. in very high relief. On the reverse the Sultan is seen on horseback, holding a whip. It was sold at Dantzic and became a part of the Anthon Cabinet in November, 1869. Some Venetian coins brought sums ranging from 90 cents to $1 50. The sale was conducted by the disposal of books treating of French, Swiss, and Italian numismatics, which brought fairly good prices.

STATE BAR ASSOCIATION.

OPPOSING ADMISSIONS TO THE BAR WITHOUT PUBLIC EXAMINATIONS—PRIZE AWARDED FOR AN ESSAY.

ALBANY, Nov. 16.—The State Bar Association met here to-day. The following persons were proposed for membership by Elliott F. Shepard, of New-York: Addison G. Rice, of Buffalo; Chester A. Arthur, John N. Hunt, and Benjamin K. Phelps, of New-York; J. Cronin, of Brooklyn; Edward E. Sprague, of Flushing; Martin D. Conway, of Albany, and Henry G. Danforth, of Rochester. Mr. Delafield, from the Special Committee on the Admission of Members of the Bar, made a long report against admitting graduates from colleges and law schools as members of the Bar without being subjected to a public examination in open court, the same as other students of the law are compelled to endure. He also offered resolutions embodying his views, one of which, after debate by William Barnes and others, were adopted. Mr. Clifford A. Hand offered the notice of an amendment to the constitution to provide for the simplification of amendments to the constitution and the abolition of standing committees. This was accepted. Elliott F. Shepard moved the adoption of the resolution in relation to the appointing of a committee of five to examine and report respecting the assembling of a national convention to consider the proposing of amendments to the fifth article of the Constitution of the United States, and report next year. After debate, the further consideration of the resolution was postponed until the next annual meeting. The following officers were elected: President—Sherman S. Rogers, Buffalo; Vice-Presidents—Sixth District, O. W. Chapman, of Binghamton; Seventh District, James C. Cochran, Rochester; Eighth District, R. C. Sprague, Buffalo; Recording Secretary—Peyton F. Miller, Albany. James Forsyth, of Troy, was elected a member of the Executive Committee in place of Enoch Coven.

At the afternoon session George W. Biddle, of Philadelphia, delivered the annual address, the subject being "Retrospective Legislation." John I. Gilbert, from the Committee on Prizes, awarded the prize of $250 to Robert P. Hanlon, of New-York, for an essay entitled "Normal Enterprise," and spoke upon the propriety of regulating commercial intercourse, especially in relation to railroads, between the States by national legislation, or that national legislation, if any, should be had to regulate commercial intercourse between the States. There were 19 competitors. Other essays were read, and the annual dinner was had at the Kenmore Hotel.

CONGREGATIONAL METHODS.

THE COUNCIL DISCUSSING SUNDAY-SCHOOL MATTERS, INDIANS, AND DIVORCES.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 16.—In the Congregational Council yesterday the Committee on Nominations presented the names of Dr. Goodell, of St. Louis, and J. M. Sturtevant, of Illinois, as delegates to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South, and the Rev. Edward Davis, of New-York, delegate to the Congregational Union of England and Wales. The report of the Publication Committee was adopted. A motion to reconsider the vote by which Sunday-school work had been transferred from the Home Missionary Society to the Congregational Publishing Society, at the last meeting of the Council, was carried, and the matter referred to a committee, which reported a resolution approving the transfer, and recommending the appointment of a Sunday-school Secretary. This, after much discussion, was tabled, and a resolution, offered by Dr. Abbott, requesting the two societies to hold a conference and arrange their difficulties, was adopted. The report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in Dakota was presented, and a committee of seven was appointed to consult with the Government regarding missionary work in that Territory. The Business Committee submitted a resolution, which was adopted, that the Council place itself on record as deploring the alarming increase of divorces throughout the land, and calling upon the ministry to use their earnest efforts to procure the sanctity of family relations, and labor to prevent divorces except upon the ground sanctioned by the Church. The Council then adjourned.

About 150 members of the Council left here last night on an excursion to the Indian Territory and Kansas.

THE ELECTION RIOT IN DENVER.

DENVER, Col., Nov. 16.—The Coroner's jury in the case of the Chinaman who was killed on Oct. 31 by a mob, in its verdict censures the city Government for inefficiency and incompetency, and states that the mob could have been suppressed by the regular Police force had they forthwith arrested the ringleaders.

THE TRAGEDY AT WANAQUE

SEEKING THE CAUSES OF MRS. DAVID'S DEATH.

THE OPENING OF THE CORONER'S INQUEST YESTERDAY—BURIAL OF THE BODY—THE TESTIMONY THUS FAR TAKEN.

POMPTON, N. J., Nov. 16.—The mystery surrounding the death of Mrs. Margaret David, wife of Samuel David, of Wanaque, is as yet unsolved. The tragedy is the one subject of talk among the farmers and villagers of the Wanaque Valley, and each has his own pet theory to account for the death of the woman. In justice to Samuel David it must be said that very few in this region who know the man believe that he had any hand in the tragic death of his wife. The woman herself was a notorious drunkard, and when under the influence of liquor was accustomed to go into the mountains, as she did on Saturday, and associate with the disreputable people of this region. She may have been wounded by some of them, and came home to die, or she may have fallen from the stoop of her house in attempting to open the door. For the present, at least, no clue to the cause of her death is at hand. The body was buried in the cemetery of the Boreville Church this afternoon. Undertaker Finton of Paterson, officiating, as no clergyman could be found.

Henry J. David, the father of Samuel David, sat in the dining-room of Tice's Hotel, in Midvale, to-day, while the inquest was proceeding in the parlor. He was very indignant at the action of Coroner Rutan in excluding him from the jury room, where he claimed that he had a right to be as counsel for his son. Of Maggie personally, he said, he knew nothing until she was married to his son. The marriage was of his own making. His son had ruined the girl under a promise of marriage, and he insisted on the fulfillment of the promise, threatening to discard Samuel unless he married the mother of his child. Since then, said the old gentleman, "my son has led a miserable life." Coroner Rutan, of Paterson, held the inquest. The proceedings were secret, no person except the witnesses under examination being allowed in the room with the jury.

Samuel David, the husband of the dead woman, testified that he had not been drinking on Saturday. His wife was inclined to drink, but when he left her at 9 in the morning to go to his work, she was sober. At 11 o'clock Jacob Brown and he came home to dinner, and his wife was not then in the house. He thought nothing of this, as she was accustomed to go up into the hills on sprees, and, having finished his dinner, he went back to his farm-work. He returned to the house at 5 o'clock in the evening. His wife was still out, and he locked the door, and, taking his two children, Jo and Harry, the one 8 and the other 3 years old, went to bed. Between 3 and 4 in the morning he had occasion to get up and go out of doors, and then he found his wife lying on the ground by the back stoop, bleeding, and apparently dead. He called his son Jo, and between them they managed to carry the woman into the house. Here he applied a mustard plaster to her breast, and rubbed her feet, but although she breathed for some time after being taken into the house, she never spoke. His wife was in the habit of leaving the house whenever she felt it came over her that "Satan" was in her, and was accustomed to indulging her appetite for liquor to excess. She had frequently gone to the woods, and returned bruised and cut. She was often intoxicated in the company of intoxicated men, especially with John Bilinger and Jacob Conklin. She left about an hour after he brought her into the house, but was not conscious any of that time. The witness admitted that he had at times struck his wife when she was uncommonly aggravating in her drunken orgies, but swore that he had not struck her in anger for the last six months.

Peter McGraw, the charcoal-burner in whose company the dead woman took her last glass of whisky, said that he saw Mrs. David on Saturday last at 1:30 in the afternoon. Bilinger had given her a drink out of a bottle. Mrs. David, he said, cried as he and his party were about to leave her, and said she was afraid her husband would come home and kill her, but gave no reason for her fears. On one occasion she witnessed had found Mrs. David in her house with her face covered with blood, and the boy Jo said that his father had inflicted the wounds. McGraw said that he had seen the woman lying in a pool of blood four different times, and that she had frequently told him that her husband abused her.

Joseph David, the son, was not sworn by Coroner Rutan, but his statement was taken at the request of his father. He testified that he left his mother alive at about 6:30 Saturday night. She was then down the road. She came into the house, went out again, and went up the hill. Peter De Graw and his wife were with her. When she entered the house she was intoxicated, and De Graw and his wife, who remained in the house, appeared to be intoxicated also. That was the last that Joseph saw of his mother alive. His father, the boy said came home at 10:05. He was perfectly sober. Joseph said that he saw his mother first on Saturday afternoon at about 4 o'clock, going down the hill. There were no cuts on her at that time, but when she came back, at 6:30, he saw cuts and blood on her face. After his father, brother, and himself had gone to bed, Joseph said that he heard a loud noise with a sound as if a person had fallen down. This was about midnight. His father got up at this time to get a drink, and, after getting a drink of water, went to bed again. At 3 AM. the father woke Joseph and the two went out to the "Satan's Kitchen" in. After the woman had been brought in, the father went out and got a pail of water and washed her off.

Mary De Graw, the wife of Peter De Graw, who was on the spree with Mrs. David on Saturday, swore that she first saw Mrs. David on that day between 1 and 2 o'clock at Bilinger's, going, she said, with her husband, to her father-in-law's, and her sister and her husband, Samuel Carklin, was with them. The party met the woman who is supposed to have been murdered at her own cabin. She came out and asked them if they had any liquor. Mrs. De Graw answered that they had, and Mrs. David then said that she wanted some. "My husband had the liquor," said the witness. "He gave her one drink, and she said on to my father-in-law's alone, and my husband started to go home to his coal-pit. When I left Mrs. David I left no one with her. I am sure that they all left her when I did, for they went up to the burned place with me.

At this point the inquest was adjourned until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

THE LATE MR. READ GORDON.

A SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS MAN—HIS FUNERAL YESTERDAY.

Mr. Read Gordon, who died on Saturday last, in the seventy-first year of his age, had long occupied a prominent position in business in this City. He was a pioneer in an important branch of the grocery trade, that of the manufacture of canned goods, which has latterly become so vast an industry. With his uncle, Smith Prentiss, he began to manufacture family preserves and canned goods in 1845, at Astoria, Long Island. In 1849 he dissolved partnership with Mr. Prentiss, and removed to No. 576 Greenwich-street, in this City, and founded the house of R. Gordon & Co. He continued in business in this place until 1869, when he retired, leaving the house in the hands of his son and nephew, the firm being Gordon & Dilworth. Mr. Gordon always believed that he was the first person engaged in the manufacture of canned goods in this country. He had been in good health until about five years ago, when he began to complain of pains about his heart, and his death on Saturday was caused by heart disease. He leaves a widow and son—Read Gordon, of the firm of Gordon & Dilworth. The grocery trade was represented at his funeral, which took place yesterday, by Mr. Joseph Park, of Park & Tilford; Mr. W. S. Corwin, of W. S. Corwin & Co.; Mr. E. C. Hazard, of E. C. Hazard & Co.; Mr. Boyle, of Boyle & Sykes; Mr. W. S. Jackson, of W. S. Jackson & Co., and Mr. Charles Macy, of Macy & Co., who acted as pall-bearers. Mr. Gordon had resided for the last 11 years in a delightful home at Cosseport, near Long Branch, purchased by him when he retired from the business which he had followed with great financial success.

TEXAS FARMERS FIGHTING ROBBERS.

GALVESTON, Nov. 16.—A special from Dallas to the News says: "This city was thrown into great excitement to-day by the arrival of a squad of 40 armed farmers, bringing the body of a dead man, and recounting the boldest robbery ever enacted in this section. Marion Johnson, a planter, was met 12 miles from this place by two masked men, knocked down, and robbed. A party went in pursuit of the robbers, and five other farmers were met who had been robbed, and who joined in the pursuit. The outlaws were overtaken within three miles of Dallas, when a general fight occurred. One robber, who was recognized as Odum Curley, of Nashville, Tenn., was killed. The other escaped, carrying 18 buckshot in his body. He is apparently about 30 years old. Eleven farmers are known to have been robbed. Both of the men are thought to be implicated in the robbery of Adams & Leonard's bank recently."

A COLLISION BARELY AVOIDED.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 16.—The steamer City of Boston narrowly escaped a collision with the steamer Newport last night near Hell Gate, the first-named steamer going across the bows of the latter. The passengers on the Newport were highly indignant, and, at a meeting, appointed a committee to look into the matter and report to the proper authorities upon the alleged recklessness of the pilots of the City of Boston.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 16.—A special to the American from Birmingham, Ala., says: "At 1 P. M. to-day, just as a north-bound passenger train on the Alabama and Great Southern Railroad was passing Hyton, the engine struck a mule standing on the track and was thrown up embankment 30 feet high and wrecked. James B. McPerson, son of the Rev. Dr. F. S. McPerson, Agent of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at Nashville, who was in the baggage car, wishing to change, and expecting the brakeman on to follow the course of the engine, jumped in the opposite direction. The baggage car fell upon him, crushing his body into the earth, and killing him instantly. A large number of passengers were on the train. Some were slightly bruised."

THE NOVA SCOTIA CALAMITY.

RAPID WORK IN FLOODING THE MINE—AN APPEAL FOR AID FOR THE SUFFERERS.

NEW-GLASGOW, Nova Scotia, Nov. 16.—All day yesterday men were at work filling in the main shaft with spruce and clay sods to stop the passage of air into the mine. The two steam fire-engines continued work all day pouring water into the mines, and there is no doubt that this has done much to stay the conflagration below. As yet no flames have appeared upon the surface, showing that the fire has not yet reached the vicinity of the shaft bottom. The trench from the river to the mouth of the fan shaft is nearly completed, and it is expected soon to have a stream of water running through it into the mine. Several steam pumps have been procured from New-Glasgow, and will also be got into operation, so that by to-night millions of gallons of water will be running down to quench the flames. It is thought possible that the fire may be confined to the old workings, and that precautions are being taken to arrest its progress should this be so. A blinding snow-storm is raging, and work in the trenches is no child's play. A complete list of the victims of the disaster foots up 41, all but two of whom belonged in Pictou.

STELLARTON, Nov. 16.—There is no very great change in affairs here to-day, except that there is a stronger smell of fire-damp on the surface, and an early explosion is expected. There was not much work done last night, as the snow made it so difficult that the trenchmen, who should have gone on duty at midnight, failed to appear. This morning work in the trenches was resumed, but only about a foot an hour can be attained. It is being pushed forward with the greatest energy at the trench leading to the old bypit, so as to keep the fire from spreading. It is expected that water will be let into the shaft before night. The work of collection for the relief of the suffering families has been very slow as yet, and it is feared that the popular sympathy has died out before meetings are held. William Dunbar, the old lamp-cleaner, who was injured at the pit bottom on Friday, died last night. Telegrams are arriving from all over the country from inquiring relatives of the living and lost who were employed in the mines. Long rows of men were down to the pit, and closed the shafts, as there was a heavy draught there, which proved to be aiding the conflagration in the Ford pit. Several other holes were also stopped up in old unused works connected with the burning pit.

A meeting was held last evening in the company's office, and it was resolved to send the following appeal to the Mayors and Wardens of various towns through Canada and the United States:

A terrible calamity has happened in this place. Two disasters in succession have been the means of killing 50 men and boys, and leaving 32 widows and 110 orphans. Our resources are exhausted. Hundreds of families of 2,000 people are thrown out of employment in the heart of a Canadian Winter. We appeal to a generous public for immediate help. Contributions may be sent to any of the undersigned:

James Hudson, Manager of the Albion Mines.
J. Bayne, Manager of the Acadia Coal and Mines.
Henry Poole, Manager of the Acadia Mines.
John Grassie, Manager of the Vale Mine.
H. Lange, Manager of the Nova Scotia Mines.
The Rev. Donald McRae, of Stellarton.
The Rev. D. C. Moore, Rector Christ Church.
The Rev. Charles Dunn, of the Church of Scotland.
The Rev. Thomas Cumming, of the Presbyterian Church.
The Rev. N. H. Thurlow, of the Methodist Church.

The New-Glasgow and Pictou steam engines are still at work. The former began at noon Sunday and the other Sunday evening. They have been at work ever since in the hands of volunteer firemen from the two towns.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

About 6 o'clock Monday evening a fire broke out in the northern part of Newport, on the Iron Mountain Railroad, and under the influence of a high wind the flames rapidly spread, until two-thirds of the buildings in the town were destroyed. About 300 families were rendered homeless, and the distress is very great. The loss is estimated at about $100,000.

Gideon Studley's box and shingle mill, at Rockland, Mass., was burned to the ground last night. The mill was full of logs and boards. The loss is estimated at $8,000; partly covered by insurance. The machinery is a total wreck.

WASTE OF PUBLIC MONEY

ITS COST AND ITS EVILS IN CITY GOVERNMENT.

HOW IT AFFECTS THE POLICE SYSTEM OF NEW-YORK—EX-COMMISSIONER ERHARDT SPEAKS — THE SENATE COMMITTEE'S HUNT AFTER ECONOMY—COL. DUNLAP'S $15,000 SALARY.

Some highly interesting and important testimony was taken yesterday before the Senate Special Committee on Municipal Retrenchment and Economy, at their session in the Mayor's Office. The full committee—Senators McCarthy, Strahan, Baker, Mills, and Bixby—was present. Ex-Police Commissioner Joel B. Erhardt was the principal witness, and he testified very freely concerning the abuses and defects which he believed existed in the Police system of the City. Col. Thomas Dunlap, Commissioner of Jurors, who has a salary of $15,000 a year, admitted that he always thought the pay was too large, but Senator Strahan suggested that that opinion was perhaps strengthened by the knowledge that the witness goes out of office next Summer, and then his successor's salary will be only $5,000 a year. Mr. Henry Moore, a resident of Harlem, appeared as the first witness, and the burden of his testimony bore against the prevalence of street obstructions. He said there was, in his opinion, no city in the world whose streets were so wantonly disfigured by awnings that look like cow-sheds, by poles, signs, peddlers' stands, and the like; there were about 3,000 or 4,000 persons in this City who were interested in maintaining these nuisances and obstructions, and they seemed to be able to have their way against the inclination of the one million people who were opposed to this system of public disfigurement. Mr. Moore gave it as his opinion that the Bureau of Incumbrances might as well be abolished, because it performed no real service to the public, and that its powers might be vested in the Police, by directing them to make complaints regarding obstructions before the local magistrates, who might compel their abatement under penalty for non-compliance.

Joel B. Erhardt, Esq., ex-Commissioner of Police, next appeared. Being asked whether he had any suggestions to make regarding economy or the reduction of expenses in the Police Department, he said he had, but that his views were, perhaps, very radical. In regard to Commissioners, he was of the opinion that the more there were of them the worse off the department was; he did not refer to any individuals, but to the system; it was precisely as though a brigade of troops was commanded by four Generals instead of one, but that in appointing four it was done on the principle that there should be two of the Generals whose duty it was to oppose the views and theories of the other two, if only for political reasons. Take, said he, another view of the matter. The board disbursed about $4,000,000 a year. What would be thought of the policy of having four treasurers in a bank, two of whom were put there with the distinct understanding that it was their duty to oppose the other two? Of course, the reason why this was done in the Police Board was because the appointment of Inspectors of Election and Poll Clerks was vested in them, but the result of it was that a principle of political bargain and sale pervaded the administration of the whole department. It was not necessary that the appointment of Inspectors and Poll Clerks should even be in the hands of a board. Some such plan as that adopted for the appointment of Federal Election Marshals and Supervisors might have been devised and would have been very satisfactory, for no one ever claimed that that plan had had any tendency to demoralize the Federal judicial system in this City.

Being asked what other powers the Police Board exercised which should be transferred from them, Mr. Erhardt said he thought the Excise administration powers did properly belong there, but that the Street-cleaning Bureau certainly did not. That duty he would vest with the Board of Health, who now exercised a certain authority over the methods of doing it. In case that was found an objectionable transfer, he saw no reason why it could not be properly given to the Board of Public Works. This Board of Public Works now gave permits to persons engaged in building and other work to deposit sand and lime in the streets for many days at a time, during which it was spread over into all adjacent streets, and he thought the power of requiring one board to clean the streets and allowing another board to dirty them might be concentrated in one board. He thought much money might be saved to the City by a proper arrangement of the force of employes. At the outset, however, on this subject he wished to say that he did not think any officer, board, or department could clean the streets properly under the present law. The law imposed too many obstacles in the way of effective service. As he understood, no refuse could be taken out of this City, although the refuse was collected every 24 hours, without a permit from a petty functionary far outside the City limits, known as a Sobre Inspector. The law should surround the duty of cleaning the streets of the great City with provisions to enable the work to be done rather than surround it with barriers and restrictions. Again, he believed a proper working force should be employed, at fair wages, for their work was arduous and highly disagreeable, and largely performed at night; but, above all, these men should be able to feel that their employment was secure, and that they were not at the beck and call of any local organization, who, because it was through with the patronage having obtained from him all that he could stand, wished to put in another man to be fired to the extent that he could stand.

Chairman McCarthy asked, "What do you mean by bleeding them?" Mr. Erhardt replied, "I mean by shaking them down for a portion of their salary, after they can give—the value of that particular man, whatever it might be—to the local political association."

"Then," continued the Chairman, "you believe that politics have something to do with these appointments?" "I do," replied the witness. "Indeed, I don't know of anything else that has to do with them."

"Is this as a tax upon the laborer's time or his pay, or on both?" "There is a difficulty about proof in that matter," said Mr. Erhardt. "I am inclined to say that I believe that very few of these men get appointed until they pay somebody for it."

Senator Strahan asked whether this belief was based on specific facts. The witness said: "It is based on my general observation. I think there is a report of mine in the records of the department covering 15 or 20 pages of legal cap. It relates to the employment of carts. I found, I think, that 250 out of 300 of the drivers of carts were not those who had been appointed to those positions; that many of these drivers were working for from 50 to 75 cents a day, although the department was paying $2 a day for each man, horse, and cart. The difference went to certain middlemen. The department might save considerably by dealing directly with these drivers, and employing them instead of letting it go through middlemen. I also caused several reports to be made while I was in the board by detailing policemen in plain clothes to watch and report how many of the employes of the Street-cleaning Bureau were doing their duties. We found about 75 per cent of those who were thus watched to be derelict, as, for instance, in taking stuff to the dumps they would carry one-quarter or one-eighth of a load instead of a full load, and not fully for a full load. This evil, in my judgment, springs from the fact that the carts are not paid the full pay allowed by the City, that they do not take no interest in the work, and was permitted to make his load as light as possible. I found that the street-sweepers were principally drones, not hard workers—in other words, they did not do a fair eight hours' work for their day's pay. All efforts to correct these abuses failed them, and I think they will fail so long as the appointment of necessary laborers is made conditional upon the politics that appoint them. The fault, I think, lies in the system, for I believe the majority of the men would work properly and fairly if they were treated fairly, and felt that so long as they worked well their places would be secured to them. I also offered a rule for a simple uniform for all of these employes of the Street-cleaning Bureau, costing $10 or $8 cents for the laborers up to $1 for the foremen. My idea was that, by having the men uniformed, or distinguished in some way as public employes, they would be more likely to attend to their duties, because they would be subject to remark by any citizen who saw them idling. The board did not adopt the suggestion."

Senator McCarthy recalled the attention of the witness to the "middle-men" and their system, and in reply to questions Mr. Erhardt said he thought their bonus would range from $1 25 to $1 75 per day out of the $3 allowed. He was informed at that time that a common work-horse could be supported for $10 a month comfortably. The carts were a pretty dear lot—little boxes on wheels—worth in fact nothing—could be hired for $1 a week. There was Inspector at the dumps to see that proper loads were delivered, but the same system prevailed there. The Inspectors kept quiet so as to retain their own places. All of these men were appointed on political recommendation, and the fault in the system was radical. He thought it a safe prediction that if any member of the Legislature had charge of the job as a business contract he would not adopt the existing system. With a proper system, securing the work to the most deserving in it as permanent employment, one-half of the number of men at present on the force could do the work, and do it better. He did not think the contract system would work any better, because the four Commissioners—two of whom are appointed to disagree with the other two—have to be bribed to the contractor or to harass him under the contract, and could enforce all the existing evils that spring from politics in the present system on or through the contractor. There must be means and ways provided by legislation for enforcing reality of the reform; that was one of the great problems. There were now no vessels fit to carry refuse out to the deep sea; there are acts of the Legislature preventing dumping in the harbor or bays; it could only be done with the relation to certain conditions of the tide, and even then subject to the supervision of the Shore Inspector. Even then, with existing appliances, it was dangerous work. He thought they had lost an Italian vessel aware for about every trip made by the Commissioners. Contracts with farmers and others to take this refuse had been taken of or tried, but proved to be of no practical use. The real authority needed was authority to purchase and use steam-tugs loading scows that could go to sea, even in rough weather—out of sight of land if need be. They would cost about $200,000.

Senator Strahan asked the opinion that the Shore Inspector was created for the sole purpose of being an obstacle to the City's necessity and for the protection of Coney Island.

Senator McCarthy said if the City could save half of the street-cleaning expenses in one year the saving of the scows would be built very readily.

Mr. Erhardt next testified in regard to another duty devolving on the Police Department, which, he believed, did not by any means properly come within the scope of its proper administration; that was the granting of certificates to persons as engineers, authorizing or licensing them to run stationary steam engines and boilers. The board granted about 4,000 of these certificates yearly to persons, hardly any of whom were competent to run a boiler or knew anything about a boiler, except that it is something that is liable to explode. For two years while he was a Commissioner he tried to procure a transfer of the officer in charge of that branch of duty, because of certain abuses which it was claimed existed. It was resolved to make a change, but on looking up the law they found that the examiner of applicants for permits to run a boiler must himself be a policeman. The board searched nearly all through the department, and found only one man who was all competent. They then consulted a man who was an expert. He was willing to do the examining and to be appointed a policeman at $1,200 a year, but when he found that he might at any time be transferred to duty on post as a patrolman he declined. Another was found who was willing to take these chances, but he was over 50 years of age, which fact disqualified him from appointment. This boiler bureau employed three or four uniformed men, and he thought it should be transferred to the Fire Department, where it could be attended to by fewer men, because they would understand it.

The next subject referred to by Mr. Erhardt was the system of specially detailing men of the force. There were now on the force some 500 or 600 men who are practically of no use. These were men who had served for long terms and were now physically incapable of rendering any proper service. He thought they should be retired on full pay—a system of pension by the City. When a policeman went on the force all other avenues of business were closed to him. He had only his pay to depend on, and could not save much from it for his declining years. Certainly, the City could not and should not turn them adrift to die when they became old and feeble. The new salary of $900 a year was too small to attract really capable men to the service, but $1,200, the old or present high grade salary, was not too low. It cost a policeman $500 a year to keep himself uniformed and clothed, for they were always required to appear in good order and never wear a shabby coat such as a laboring man might if he saw fit.

Senator Strahan said it was strange that the witness or some other member of the board had not presented that view to the Legislature while they were going into the subject. Mr. Erhardt replied that he did appear before a Senate committee on that subject, and was examined by Senator Woodin. Senator Strahan said he knew that some of the Commissioners expressed the opinion that $600 a year was enough, and if they had not done so there would not have been any reduction made if he (Senator Strahan) could have prevented it.

Mr. Erhardt said he thought it affected the discipline of the force injuriously to have two or three grades of salary. Another thing which he believed was destructive of the discipline of the force was the compelling the uniformed and appointed men to contribute money to meet the expenses of a political campaign. He thought such a proceeding should be made at least a misdemeanor. Such a levy had not been made for many years until it was done in the late election. He would not object, however, to any policeman contributing voluntarily to such an object. He was informed that circulars were sent out ordering the levy, and he supposed it was a fair inference that the two political elements in the board had come to some agreement about sending them out. It was quite evident that they did not disagree about it. Unless the force was protected from assessments of that kind the system would ultimately exhaust them of nearly all their salary, and nearly, if not all, of their good qualities. It would certainly tend to the utter demoralization of the force. He did not think the members of the force had yet become a part of a political machine, or that they took anything like partisan interest while on duty or in uniform in the political affairs of either party, but if they continued to be assessed they very soon would. A uniform could not be touched with politics without spoiling it.

Senator Strahan said he thought the salaries of the two great uniformed organizations—the Police and firemen—should be kept out of local control, and should be fixed by the Legislature, subject to regulation only by the Board of Apportionment. In reply to further questions, Mr. Erhardt said that so long as the appointment of election officers rests with the Police Board, it was desirable that it should be kept beyond the arbitrary control of any one political party, but that might be done just as well by having a non-partisan board of two members. But for purposes of purely Police administration a board of three members was preferable to four, two would be better than three, and one Commissioner or head would be better than any other number. The whole history of this country showed that where several men exercising power disagreed in their political views they were likely to be equally at variance and equally hostile in their administrative acts and views. In all other great cities of the world the Police were controlled by a single head. The political division in our Police system was the head of all the evils in the department.

Judge McAdam, of the Marine Court, was examined as to the feasibility of reducing expenses by cutting down the force of attendants in that court. He testified point-blank that he did not think a reduced force could do the work.

Col. Thomas Dunlap, Commissioner of Jurors, was next examined. He testified that his salary was $15,000 a year. It was his duty to superintend the drawing of juries for all the State courts of record and the Civil Justices' courts in this City, and the position was a very responsible one. He obtained his lists from the registry lists and the City Directory, and examined all jurors as to their qualifications. He had nothing to do with the creating of the salary of his office. He thought the salary ought to be low—that it was too high, and he had always thought so. The last Legislature passed a bill making the salary, after the expiration of his term, in July next, $6,000 a year, and allowing $6,000 for maintaining the office. He thought the salary should be from $7,500 to $10,000. He went into office in 1873. All the fees after paying office expenses were paid into the City Treasury. The office expenses ran up to about $11,000 a year, and he did not think it could be run for less. The only year he had paid any surplus into the City Treasury was in 1876, the amount being about $5,600. He never knew of anybody in his office taking fees or bribes for striking persons off the jury list, and would not tolerate such a thing. His clerical force of five men could not be diminished without detriment to the public service.

Thomas Boese, Clerk of the Superior Court, was next examined in regard to his staff of clerks and their duties, and testified that he did not think the number could be reduced without impairing the public service. Neither did he think the staff of court attendants could be cut down. The pay-roll of the court employes amounted to $98,000, and he did not think the work could be done very well if the Legislature was to cut it to $95,000.

Senator McCarthy offered a resolution, which was adopted by the committee, calling on the Police Department for a detailed statement of its financial receipts and expenditures since May 1, 1878, including the Street-cleaning service.

The committee then adjourned until this morning.

HACKENSACK BANK AFFAIRS.

The wife of John Jacob Berry, the defaulting Treasurer of the suspended Bank of Bergen County, and Cashier of the Bergen County Savings Bank, also suspended, remained with him in the jail corridor all of Monday night. Yesterday, soon after noon, she went to her home, leaving her husband in a very much more cheerful humor than just after his commitment. The Trustees of the Savings Bank held a meeting yesterday afternoon and appointed an Executive Committee to take charge of the bank's affairs under Chancellor Runyon's orders. Senator-elect Wortendyke has not yet begun his investigation into the affairs of the savings bank. The order appointing him Examiner has been sent to the office of the Clerk in Chancery to be filed, and the certified copy has not yet been sent back. Till he receives the certified copy of the order appointing him, Mr. Wortendyke says he will not begin his labors. At the County Bank affairs remain unchanged. Mr. Johnson, the Receiver, has only made a cursory examination, and is unable to give any more definite information as to the amount of the deficiency than that already published. A rumor had started that Mr. Berry had stolen a quantity of diamonds left with him for safe-keeping by his brother-in-law, but the diamonds were discovered yesterday in the vault of the bank, where Berry had deposited them. The meeting of depositors to-morrow promises to be well attended.

THE XXIND DISTRICT REPUBLICANS.

The Twenty-second Assembly District Republican Association held a special meeting last evening to take action in regard to the disloyalty of certain members of the association. Charles F. Valentine presided. Mr. James McKenna, the Republican candidate for member of Assembly in that district in the recent election, moved that a committee of five be appointed to investigate charges against Thomas F. Conlin, Jacob Knoblock, Henry C. Robinson, Hamilton Bridge, Charles J. Killeen, Louis Leubscher, and Charles Dumouilin. The general charge against them is the alleged violation of article XVI. of the constitution of the association and of their pledge of membership. The specifications are that the aforementioned members, with the exception of Mr. Dumouilin, circulated blank tickets for member of Assembly, and voted such tickets. They are all further charged with circulating and voting tickets for District Aldermen in which the name of John McClave did not appear. There was no discussion on the resolution, which was unanimously adopted, and the Chairman appointed as a committee Messrs. Nelson Mott, Jeremiah Moore, Stephen H. Harriman, David H. Marsiville, and Richard Charlton. The committee is to report the result of the investigation at the next regular meeting of the association.

A WORTHLESS HORSE.

William A. Covert, doing business at No. 198 Bleecker-street, and living at Flushing, Long Island, appeared before Justice Smith, in the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, as complainant against William J. Carroll, a horse-dealer, who he charged with having, in connection with the well-known Abe Gerson, swindled him in a horse trade. They guaranteed the animal to be perfectly sound, and Mr. Covert paid them $100 and started with the horse for Flushing. When he got to Hunter's Point the animal broke down completely, and Mr. Covert was compelled to dismount and lead him all the way to Flushing. He was so broken-winded as to be entirely useless. Carroll was brought before Justice Smith yesterday, and bailed for examination. Covert disposed of the horse for $10.

ON TRIAL FOR MURDER.

TESTIMONY FOR THE PROSECUTION AGAINST MUNSEBERG, WHO KILLED LINDHAUER.

The jury for the trial of Frederick J. Münzberg, accused of the deliberate murder of Xavier Lindhauer, at No. 43 Forsyth-street, on Aug. 2, was completed about noon yesterday in the Court of Oyer and Terminer. Recorder Smyth sat upon the bench with Presiding Judge Noah Davis during the morning session. When the twelfth juror had taken his seat in the box, Assistant District Attorney Bell opened the case for the prosecution. He detailed the circumstances that preceded the murder, and those which gave it its brutal character. He asserted that there was no escape from the conclusion that Münzberg had either committed a deliberate murder, or was relieved of all responsibility for the killing of Lindhauer by mental weakness amounting to insanity. While Mr. Bell spoke Münzberg kept his eyes fixed intently on him. His son, a flaxen-haired child of 8 years, stood between his knees. His little daughter, whose eyes, like the boy's, are turned awry, roamed at will through the court-room. Mrs. Münzberg, holding a sickly infant in her arms, paced nervously up and down the room behind her husband. The remarks of the Assistant District Attorney irritated her, and she occasionally uttered an exclamation of dissent. At one time she became so angry that she ran from the side of the jury-box to the table at which lawyers and reporters sat, and clutched at a plasterer's trowel which lay upon it. It was the trowel with which the murdered man struck her husband when he had assaulted him and his wife on July 23. Her effort to obtain possession of the tool was frustrated by a lawyer's clerk, and court officers took her to the side of the room. It was evidently her purpose to throw the trowel at Mr. Bell if she had obtained possession of it.

The first witness for the prosecution was Mrs. Emily Lindhauer—the widow of the murdered man—a pleasant-looking little German woman. She said that on the afternoon of July 23 her husband was mixing kalsomining material in the court-yard in front of the house in which they lived, at the rear of No. 43 Forsyth-street. Münzberg entered the yard, and, going up to Lindhauer, called him vile names, and told him he had taken work which would otherwise have been given to him to do. Lindhauer denied that he had done anything wrong, but his attempts to pacify Münzberg seemed only to increase his anger. Mrs. Lindhauer said she then went between the two men, and told Münzberg to be quiet. He answered by striking her in the face. This irritated her husband, who struck at once his assaulting with his trowel. When the struggle ended the witness and her husband went into their apartments, whither Münzberg followed them. Picking up a beer-glass, he threw it at Lindhauer, but did not hit him. He picked up another, and was about to throw it, when the witness and a Mrs. Everts forced him out of the room. Mrs. Lindhauer said that she became frightened, and induced her husband to go and live at the home of Mrs. Everts for three days. On the following Saturday morning she and he went to the Essex Market Police Court, and obtained a warrant for Münzberg's arrest for assault and battery. Justice Otterburg reprimanded Münzberg and dismissed the case. Nothing happened until Monday afternoon. She, her husband, and Mrs. Everts were then sitting in her room, with the door open into the hallway. She saw Münzberg enter the house and go up stairs to his rooms. A few minutes later he came down again and entered her room. As he passed through the doorway he discharged a revolver. Her husband jumped from his chair, exclaiming "I'm shot," and ran into the bedroom, the door of which he locked after him. Münzberg pursued him, and burst the door open. The witness and Mrs. Everts, affrighted by the scene, ran into the court-yard, but on hearing a second shot the witness ran back and found Münzberg holding her husband against the casing of the bedroom door. She took hold of him and tried to wrest his revolver from him. During the struggle her husband got free and ran out of the room. Münzberg then threatened her life, and, as she left the room, pursued her husband. She next saw him standing by the body of her husband, which was lying in the street. Mrs. Anna Everts corroborated the testimony of Mrs. Lindhauer, and added that she followed Lindhauer and Münzberg into the street, where she saw the latter fire a shot into the prostrate body of the former. She also saw him pull the trigger of his revolver twice subsequently while pointing the weapon at the dead man, but the weapon was not again discharged.

Other witnesses were then examined, but their testimony was not important until Miss Josephine Bodkin was put upon the stand. She is the young woman who shamed a crowd of cowardly men by attacking Münzberg as he was endeavoring to fire a second shot into the prostrate Lindhauer, and wresting the weapon from him. She told her story in a natural manner, and did not seem to understand that her heroism had made her an object of admiration. She said that as she was walking in Forsyth-street, she saw a tall man, pursuing a shorter one down an alley, cross the street, and fall down. The shorter man discharged a revolver while running, but did not hit the other. When he reached the fallen man he fired a shot into his head. Horrified by the act, she ran across the street and grasped the man with the captured by his right wrist. Holding his right hand up, she took the pistol from it, and put it behind her back. He tried to recover it, and in his attempt grasped a bracelet upon her wrist, breaking it and cutting her arm and hand. She got away from him and ran down the street, where she met a policeman, to whom she gave the weapon.

Police Captain Gastlin and Patrolman Bodell, who arrested Münzberg, testified that the prisoner told them he had killed Lindhauer to get satisfaction. Henry Mahlstedt, who keeps a saloon at No. 43 Forsyth-street, testified that on the Friday night before the murder Münzberg showed him a revolver with which, he said, he was "going for" a whitewasher. He walked up and down the bar-room muttering, and seemed much excited, but was not drunk. The case for the defense will be opened to-day.

POLICE DEPARTMENT MATTERS.

At a meeting of the Police Commissioners yesterday, Inspector Byrnes said he did not approve of the conduct of Detective Ferris, who acted strangely in regard to a gold and enameled locket which was found in the possession of Herbert Edwards, a young Englishman, who tried to procure money on it in a Third-avenue pawnshop. Owing to Ferris's unofficer-like conduct the jewel became the property of a Tombs Police Court lawyer. Inspector Byrnes wished to emphasize his disapprobation of Ferris's conduct by striking him from the roll of Central Office Detectives. Ferris was transferred to patrol duty in the Thirty-fifth Precinct.

On motion of Mr. Mason a resolution was adopted calling on the Chief Clerk to report what reductions could be made in the Central Office service. The Superintendent was directed to report what detailed officers can be placed on patrol duty, as many precincts are short-handed. The Superintendent of Telegraph was requested to report if the number of telegraph operators can be reduced, and to give statistics of the work performed in the office. Mr. Nichols reported that Inspector Williams had adjusted difficulties which arose out of the dumping of street refuse at One Hundred and Thirty-fifth-street and Fifth-avenue. Patrolman Johnson, of the Sixteenth Precinct, was dismissed the force for beating a citizen.

PASSAIC'S BREACH OF PROMISE CASE.

Sheriff Van Voorhies, of Passaic County, N. J., yesterday served a summons on William S. Gutierres, of Passaic City, for $25,000 damages in a suit for breach of promise. Mr. Gutierres is one of the most prominent citizens of Passaic, where he is, and for several years has been a member of the City Council, and has occupied a conspicuous position in the best society of the town. He is a member of the firm of J. M. Shaw & Co., wholesale crockery dealers in Duane-street, in this City. He is handsome, refined, and has always been looked upon as a perfect gentleman. His wife died about a year ago, leaving him with five children, the most of them grown up, and some of them married. Soon after her death it is said that he began paying attentions to Miss Lilian Abbott, a handsome young lady of 30 years, residing between Clifton and Centreville, and who is very intelligent, well educated, and accomplished. According to general report, Mr. Gutierres became so devoted as the most exacting lady could desire, and Miss Abbott claims that they were engaged to be married during the present month. But last Summer while at Saratoga he met another young lady, to whom he immediately transferred his attentions, completely deserting Miss Abbott, and engaging himself to marry her next month. Miss Abbott accordingly demands $25,000 as compensation for her wounded feelings, and the summons in the case is returnable Dec. 3, being some days before the date set for his marriage to his latest intended bride. Such is the story as related by the friends of Miss Abbott. As the parties concerned are of the highest respectability, the suit bids fair to create a decided sensation among their respective friends. Mr. Gutierres is about 50 years of age.

Their names were Philip and George Seltzerlick, brothers, aged, respectively, 21 and 16 years; George Evans, aged 18, and James Mohen, aged 18. The four prisoners were jointly indicted for burglary in the first degree, the charge against them being that on the night of the 8th inst. they broke into the residence of Mr. Charles Johnson, at No. 10 West Twenty-first-street, and carried off wearing apparel valued at $6,000, consisting of a sealed hair shawl, rich velvet and silk dresses, a velvet cloak, lace fans, and some gentlemen's clothing. Officer Kiernan, of the Eighteenth Precinct, visited the residence of Philip Seltzerlick, No. 226 East Twenty-second-street, and found the greater portion of the property stolen from Mr. Johnson. Philip admitted his guilt. Two indictments were found against him, and he pleaded guilty to both. The other prisoners, through their counsel, Mr. John O. Mott, pleaded not guilty, and their case was set down by Judge Cowing for trial on Friday next. Sentence on Philip was postponed, and it is possible he will be used as a witness for the prosecution against his confederates.

When the constable returned to Harrison he found that the woman had been discharged during his absence. The judicial differences have shaken the two towns from centre to circumference, and the end is not yet.

A NOTED BURGLAR CAUGHT.

DETECTIVE SCHMITTBERGER DOES SOME GOOD WORK—ARREST OF WILLIAM NELSON.

Detective Max Schmittberger, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, brought into the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday William Nelson, alias Robert Wilson, whom he represented to be one of the most daring and desperate burglars in the United States. The charge on which he was arrested is that he is a fugitive from justice, and is wanted by the authorities of the State of Maine. It is charged by the detective that Nelson and a companion in crime named George O'Neill were the leaders of a gang of desperate thieves, who, during last Spring and the early months of the Summer, terrorized the inhabitants of Biddeford, Me., and the neighborhood by their bold crimes. Burglaries by masked men became an almost nightly occurrence, and the staid people living in detached residences were almost afraid to retire to rest, fearing that they would be murdered in their beds. All efforts by the local Police authorities to detect the gang of thieves proved futile, and finally the people organized a Vigilance Committee, and, aided by the Sheriff of the county and the local military authorities, started in real earnest to hunt up the burglars. On July 1, Nelson and O'Neill were captured, and after a long examination were committed to the York County Jail, at Alfred, Me., to await trial. On Oct. 26 they escaped from prison by tunneling under the walls of the jail. After their flight, the Sheriff of York County sent broadcast throughout the country circulars containing a description of the fugitives and a reward for their arrest. One of these circulars recently fell into the hands of Detective Schmittberger, and, knowing the haunts of the fugitives, he kept a sharp lookout for them. On Monday evening, while walking down Sixth-avenue, he saw Nelson standing on the corner of Thirty-first-street, surrounded by a crowd of his friends. Schmittberger elbowed his way through the crowd, and, putting his hand on Nelson's shoulder, told him he was a prisoner and requested him to accompany him to the station-house. Nelson broke off the officer's grasp, and, jumping back a few steps, pulled out a revolver from his overcoat pocket and levelled it at the officer. Before he could fire, however, Schmittberger struck him a blow in the face felling him to the pavement. He then jumped on him and wrenched the pistol from his grasp. The friends of the prisoner closed about the struggling pair and the detective was in a perilous position. Patrolman Gamble, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, rushed to the resc
